Things.

Things not remembered.

All kinds of things and things have no essence but they call.

This Delft sugar bowl from Japan speaks my native tongue—everything talks to us.

No person there in it but it speaks.

No real object present

standing there before us but we feel it.

No essence in us either but we know.

No person in me but I speak.

Open the semblance of a door and seem to live inside what seems an empty house in clearest knowing but nothing known.

Only in this perfectly empty body can I live.

Waiting to talk to someone who isn't there. The phone only works between two agents, two subjects.

One of them might conceivably be me but who is the other?
Tanker breaking through ice up the river two weeks back.
Now serene the open reach far as a ship can see but we even the best of us are moored in the sky.

Saltimbanque City down here gravel underfoot but sparkles in her cheeks the woman's sister swings above the net topples from one man to another, trapeze, she's the human message tossed, Rilke sideshow, an ace of tambourines rattles in the deck until the Queen of Sequins coaxes her to earth and speaks us both.

I have tried for years to tell you I am spoken by what I see.

(statement to a workshop:)

First a general note to the workshop: I am impressed by and grateful for the enthusiasm, wit and patience you all have demonstrated in putting up with my experiments in saying. As I keep repeating, it's all in the language. No, it's all in the mind. No, it's all in the breath. All three are true, all three are necessary. When in doubt, I trust the language—it's older than I am, it's been around. It knows. The works that you have produced have been markedly different from one another, all have been interesting, all have engaged us in the reader's dance or travel, finding our way through the landscaped text.

MUTHOS

To fold the story you mean into the story told

Olson did that his wife his Hurrians

the Sea-God
kissing strange men

the Anthropos my ology finding in ancient peoples strange enough to be me, a continuous present of old-time anthropologists Roheim's dreamtime, the ever-ever land

that could be me.

Desperate Aristotle
anxious for an entity to sustain his Qualities, Once in a while we sat shoulder to shoulder smoking, watching friends eat—he slammed out of the church he told me away from the baptism of his son there are no families there are only other people.

2.

There is no god there is only what we do.
Speak into the myth myth means what is spoken you have no life that wasn't lived before, it's not all King Arthur and the Victorians, there was glamor and grammar and one thing more, the magic of saying so haunts Behistun,

the dead man in Egypt rides a word boat across the sky one more word to hold him in her arms.

3.

So nothing personal you understand the weather is your book and your mood its pages

Muth in old German spelling is courage, our mood the more as our might littles...

last cry of the English in that connection, nothing personal you understand just a woman standing on one leg just a flock of wild geese in the corn stob just a change of weather

4.

I told you because it was true and truth (that weird positive we seem to trust so much) is never reason enough to tell but I had more, I wanted you to understand the difference of distances, that a man can be far from himself and still close to you by myth he means it by old names for new faces not so new after all I see you better when I close my eyes.

5.
She stands on one leg and a red light comes on.
She utters various colors and each one elicits a special behavior from the man, I can't tell inside from outside,

o Frank

Kunstler used to say I can't tell right from wrong, smiling his grand Hungarian smile as he said it forgive the perplexities of aesthetics making good art in a hard time when the red light goes out.

6.

Reading in good light

the annals,

the deeds of men

spread over the lap catching sight of an Indo-European root in archaic Chinese, guessing yet again that it was one,

once,

speech,

the thing of us,

the thing we made that made us back, and guess again, he could make himself live into that, his lives his little pilgrimages the Malinowski of the mind takes sail in that, the myth thing,

telling into the told.

Why looking out the window see only what I want to see—what good is that?

The shadows say as much as trees as birds or I don't know what that is moving too far to be anything but itself, and fast.

THE MIDDLE WATCH

It has to happen then the time between Biber and Bach between midnight and before the dawn when it is dark the to-rang we know from Tibet, when the dark is changing when else could a man like me live?

Spring has begun

[Dream communiqué:]

After a scarless travel of fifteen candlelight-years we come to the green Deva on the Shore.

20/21 March 2011

[dreamt at waking; the sense was that a candlelight-year was a measure. like a light-year but closer, shorter, almost reachable. I suppose the green Deva was Tara, though there was not an image, just the words.]

Reading a friend's words that kind of religion

I am smitten
from the sky—

soft snow first day of spring

super nivem dealbabor

Words wash us too.

Flow resumes.

A flaw.

Be small.

Rillwise seek.

Water always knows the way.

Be water.

Or go the other way.

Be safe in your nests, deliverlings. Ye have come into auto-mental workshop world the bric-a-brac all round you. Everything you can see is a tool—use it, if only to look at.
To sharpen vision. There are so many machines we have to build before we're done.

And this is something I know—this uses me now over the long day—
snow needs a lot of punctuation, dark words, epitaphs in late Latin verse et cætera. The day promises to be complex starting with the sky.
Then new snow on grass
'ill-silencing' all that green—a cakey look out there makes me hungry but what doesn't.
Watching the white prevail I'm a stowaway in a workshop privileged to observe the whole process from when the rain turned snow and dragged all its glistening ampersands behind.
Blank I am. Game of light in near trees played.
Even the brown leaves receive their own absolution.

Failing you, there is no vectoring.
The problem with living alone is that after a while there is no me either, just things going on or seeming to gradually erased by pure unintending snow.

All that meta-lingo wants to know

it looks like snow
it sounds like rain

a car next door
a far-off train.

PASSAGE TEXT

Like the passage graves of Neolithic Europe, Ireland especially. You have to crawl or walk low. You have to walk low through the excavated tunnels in the huge tumulus heaped up by those who built the tunnels too, right hand working against left. You know it by weight and pressure and fear as you go along, following the straight line the builder insisted. You can't turn, you can barely retreat. But even so, so much is left up to you. If you come at the right time—and if the builder did his job right, everything aligned to ley-lines or celestial axes—come on, it still takes two to do this dance—then you will see something, feel something, intuit something, know something. The meaning of the text, just like the body of the chieftain ages past interred in this monument, has long ago crumbled away. You are left with the sense of having traveled through a made-up earth, and come somewhere, and heard something and know something for sure. But what?

on their mad rush towards silence

One cause of not knowing is not knowing.
Another cause is knowing the wrong things.
