Wake among rivers of rain waking to rain in a day of thaw.

Thaw rain day.
Wake. History
fits everyone.

You can be me.
Already you are.
Already my breath gets lost in your chest, you spit my words out.

We
is a contaminated commodity blessedly.
We are aristocrats pretending to be milkmaids at Versailles.
We pretend to be each other.
No cow, no milk, no Trianon.
We are not even ourselves.
Blessedly the rain has washed all that away.

Sometimes my heart is cold a field of snow but there are fox prints delicate, full of shadow, leading to you.

If all the houses once occupied by great poets became museums honoring those dead poets the population of the earth would have to live elsewhere.

We are all dreamers.

A ribbon the color of a rose you wanted, all right, here it is tie it softly in your hair the color of your hair and look at me with eyes just exactly the color of your eyes and this will be thanks enough the color of sanctifying grace.

If I weren't so nice I would tell the bus driver where to go, and tell the schoolgirl who thinks she's entitled to a higher grade what her work is really worth.
But I am nice,
nice the way winter I, inevitably yielding to spring, nice and meager and stupid and clean like bus loads of old people waiting in Stockbridge, Massachusetts for the Norman Rockwell Museum to open.
Whatever you do, driver, don't go there.

Keep everything ten feet away.
Don't look at the sky.
Close the book.
And for five minutes forget the pagan gods already. Just pay attention to this.
Now tell me what it is.

It's late enough for me to be somebody else when I go out to check the weather (as if I could do anything about it) my shadow on the snow looks like a man wearing a fez a gratifying illusion or impersonation though I'm not sure what part of the image is the illusion and I'm not too sure about the weather maybe I can do something about it take off my hat and let the stars like Paracelsus work their way down into my head since our brains and nearby souls are nothing other than emulsions primed for them to scribble their luminous mysteries on until we think we understand something and maybe I do maybe that shadow is really someone else my angel my carpenter my instrument my god.

Buying a peccary

by mail. Come to me my javelina, pig thou art not thou art something else.

Everything is illegible, of no known origin, splashes through the shallows.

Everything insists on being a kind of river.
Washes over my feet.
Knocks at the door.

Mailman, mailman bring me an animal,
my door is open,
I am singing.

BEFORE THE MOUNTAINS CAME TO TOWN

(variations on some old words, substrate words, Basque now, from the long before)

All afternoon the wind was near asking for our custom:
Come buy my dream,
dear friend

When my friend awakens from a little nap she likes to take in the quiet time between the afternoon trains it is my custom to sit down near her and ask Did you dream?
I dreamed something she says, but I think it was only the wind.

Dreaming the wind, a close friend is near.

Afternoon.

Ask me anything you want

And always the other poems, other vistas: the permutations I dont see, or don't understand. The obstruction of the lyrical. The obstruction of making sense. That is why I keep going on writing, forever, I guess, trying to get all of what is offered, trying to get it all down.

Dear Diary I have told you this so you could tell everybody later when my back is turned.
Every poem is confessional – but only the avowal counts, the sins are trivial.
But the apologetic murmur after sounds like Handel's ten minute chorus of Amen.
I fill the church with intimacies.
I roar the tender moment touched me.

I'm not sure, am I one or many, I'll look it up, later, in Bruno.
Meantime I'll remember that girl in Bratislava, she could tell me a thing or two,

we walk on two legs she said, we need two of anything, similar but a little different to get anywhere, Hegel and Kierkegaard, you and me, to get there but the only thing that counts is between them.

Fighting shy of what tells me.
Resisting is also a kind of negative capability,

dancing with the poem not always letting it say what it wants to say, waits to say,

it's a good dancer,
better than I am,
waits me out,
I say it, I resist

as long as I can then let it speak, say the thing I don't myself believe the thing that spoke me into the world needs comfort and praise.

THREE THINGS THAT MAKE ME HAPPY

Magnifying
glasses, magnets, wooden spoons.

THREE THINGS RICH PEOPLE DON'T KNOW

How much a quart of milk costs, how generic cigarettes taste, how cheap facial tissues are hard to get out of the box.

Late late and I hoped you mirror on the ceiling so I could remember what I wanted heaven to look like when I got there when I get there Comus on one side Bruno on the other there is no one more conservative than Hell the beautiful Lucifer takes tea at Claridge's beautifully. Meantime nothing remembers me. Secretly I am as crazy as Artaud, sane as Blake, great but not very good.

They said "Go fly a kite" and I did, I still do, a thin arrangement of the sky, dispositif de papier et d'encre a flimsy paper thing in the heavens with a thick heavy ugly string hanging down to earth.

In the final years of the next century when lunch gets delivered by pure thought and sexual shenanigans are licit only on Friday I will come to you again disguised as a skier skimming the endless snows of Topanga and breeding violets in my small den.
Because flowers will be in again.
Some days I come trudging through blizzards carrying my cat, I'll kick at your doorflap and you'll whistle me in, we'll linger for hours admiring the shadows from your newest fire.
Maybe it's enough to know all this today so we don't get too frightened or try to learn too many weird languages, English is crooked enough.

Spoilsport philosopher, pack your bags.
We're off to Vegas with the dawn wind to see what people really want to do with time.
I still don't think it will be vile as we think, I have a weird feeling I'll like everything I see even the sexagenarian showgirls, the polyester philanderers, glum children with iPods and beer.
If we get scared we can hide in the library pretending to read books about aging or pets.
We can analyze everything, react, analyze our reactions and react to that. And the beauty part is that nobody knows we're here.

In all these years I have been nowhere but this road

walking on it feels like sitting still like resting under a tree like reading a book like making love like standing in a bar with friends

walking on it is gentle, is as soft as standing still as Romeo and Juliet, walking on it is like talking but most of all like sleeping walking on this road is sleeping together till we get there the nameless destination.

your body I am all about you Kriemhild's revenge the old story the hero misunderstood all the way to death how I misspeak myself because he fell asleep to his own identity along the way. I am safe.
I have no identity to lose.

But could I listen?
Can I begin in the middle of things, in the middle of what you were saying?

I didn't catch the beginning, you have been talking forever, I was absent at my grandmother's wedding I forgot to dry your feet when you stepped ashore we love each other another these little oversights pass unrebuked I wait to hear you I want to listen to the very end.

And there will be no end.
