Names are drugs

we die of agora mouth full of nothing

I adore this absent god

MITOSIS

What shall the bourn be or the barrier between the thee-happenstance and the me-mistake so that one of the twin of us ought to look out for our fat feet and stumble over the frontier those sloppy borderguards with their cretinous mustaches their oilcreased chin geologies o I'm sorry that's me that's a mirror no I'm sorry that's my face I see deep in the apple of your eye when we are close you fucked a mirror and gave birth to me if me I am I mean if all this heap to use the technical word sorites to translate a no-account nihilogism a skandha in sunlight and the wind blowing cool as somebody else's radio always tuned to in the know should happen to have accumulated like a sentence in a legal document to actual beans from which we could be born and born again why am I always at the front of the line and always out of fashion what a weird predictable comeuppance for a kid like whee the slips and slides of infancy soon become the public tragedy reviewed in depth by hotshot daytime journalists thin as Tolstoi sweet as Gorki and the brilliant herringfishermen are back from their midnight escapades among exuvius Slovak supermodels at Saint Tropisme sullen as a buttock in the sun her lustered eye daunts glum admirers this means we need new tires to penetrate the highways of that long night if ever we would mount the sacred rainbow necktie fluttering god's own blue helter-skelter cosmogram scaring learned penguins as they scatter with dignity over the appalling university of ice that's all the world finally has to offer as opposed to its opposite whatever that might be water that's all it gives us and from this little spurt of moist we write a sprout that springs a world out of the most unconsidered spherical geometry of the kitsch we live among and that world in turn lotuses out like Christmas with its tongue on fire and says you for instance until I can't bear the solitude of not saying it too and I turn out to have been the Holy Spirit all along and isn't that amazing whether you think so or not that this bland blend of not much in particular should be enough to be particular just because there is meat on the bones and a voice in the cellar.

A quorum. A band of covenanters howling at God they call it praying prayer is the line inside from here to where prayer is the answer to an absent question but where is here and are we here where we think here is so that you are elsewhere and there wherever you are is where a prayer has to find its way helped only by the shouting the song the hymnody the yelping of men among men like wolves bleating to the dead moon whereas prayer is silk on a summer day and enough is too much your body does my praying for me a direct line between me and God a track lost in the desert a well filled up with sand, a stone in the shape of a heart still beating you can hear it from half a mile away.

LE GAI SÇAVOIR

Rabbi, I think I know too much about all this to have anything worth saying.

Knowledge is the silence of desire

But there is a kind of joyous knowing that wants some more.

15 May 2001

How can knowledge turn into knowing? A red box. It is filled with something. It fills the poly-film shrink-wrapped around it. It weighs about two hundred grams. It is red. I could tell you more about the color — that it is more like a persimmon than like the Polish flag, for instance — but you'd have to ask me first. Because I am always (only) the color of doing what you say.

rather than resist a bone falls into his hand the sky was made that way a constant yielding to what with no more intention opened its hands to have Suppose water did not flow and mud did not harden and you could touch no body a picture world to live in hell of images

Exodus no graven god Given

Abstain from showing
So that we can know.

I found a phoenix
Feather today
Glimmering tawny
With brown ocelli
In the vane of it
One big and many Small, the stub
Had parted from the wing When the bird
Rose out of its renewal And went home Leaving me alone
With my body
Some wind on a hill.

a sea on Mars remember water a Jew in Babel breath on his fingers hurt music born coal brazier girls shuttling through dark cellar talk harp waking Galilee it was the me fact it was the nail

Zion is last night dream my harp hung on the moon a car paseos to make the sound of something sung if I forget work of the hand all ever had any of us last night's dream

To say less the gauds of silence glister round your neck

I kiss you there and let it speak

Can't writhe or work anew abominate scrimshaw slippers dyed with sandarac till the lean lines look like blood dried inside the somber bone of the bone to breathe is like some wrestling down implant diode listen while it can to the lust soon lost velle non discitur is the smartest city you got to want to want rappers on a goal-less road in waning moon triste lune-less crew of lewd consumers hungering for analog — the violence spills where time once had kept their laps

not sure that anything there shadow of man on door shadow of door on window a face looking back at itself a brow

I caught a phoenix feather from a gust of lawn had ocelli on it those little eye-like marks ocelli little eyes the biggest one looked at me with a blue voice it said what I am supposed to think

This is analysis man disguised as a door disguised as a face behind me looking away

Tea is in my opinion a phantasticum, coffee an energeticum — tea therefore possesses a disproportionately higher artistic rank. I notice that coffee disrupts the delicate lattice of light and shadows, the fruitful doubts that emerge during the writing of a sentence. One exceeds his inhibitions. With tea, on the other hand, the thoughts climb genuinely upward.

— Ernst Jünger, 1948

I think therefore I do more than I can and more than I know exceeding the sense they gave me when they told me Here be born and do as little as you can don't you use up the precious store of not-knowing we gave you in the birth canal when you were the little eel in search of hell the place of milk however to grow until you know no knowing they said

and this black drink acids their dumb door.

because a key unlocks only the air and the door just stands there listening intelligently till the body understands

Tivoli

Trying for the purity of an owl open eyes asleep at noon amber in a crowded tree no one passing.

Exaggerations of the moon I dream of you saintly slutty transiting each to each unmistakable desire we are a hard word in your mouth.

Suppose it is what it's supposed to be a beak battering the stump of an old linden tree whose the woodpecker's Picus the pileated one that is so big and shrieks with laughter in one afternoon took the whole tree apart the torments of vocabulary know no end each word stripteasing an immense desire to know itself renewed in this and this lordly destination of language all that happens to the mind when you say green then you say eyes I don't know I'm not sure the birds know the way there and I do not.

summer in the air, a somewhere drifting its way here a cloud with a pencil in its hand doodling this along the ground head almost reads almost forgets

A CLASSICAL EDUCATION

What have I learned?
Ambrosia feeds the gods
But there are no gods.
Venus is the goddess of love But love is very hard

Very hard. Truth
Is what makes people Happy. And that is true.
