These are to be assumed--- the hope of humankind to reach beyond the cave a small fixture called The Sun small enough to fit our laps and held with a brass prong to turn it towards all we have need to declare.

And these things too we must remember

1 September 1992
I am Merlin. I have no choice.
The instruments laid down along my veins point me to the world he sees is.
I cannot turn away. Even the dark below the stone is full of interest, is the song folded tight in upon itself, to wear the music as she wears her hair long long and intricate the airs the aires move round her

And I am Merlin and I have no choice no more than a blackbird no more than an eel caught in a weir of osier twigs no more than a rock so I came along the path remembering how late summer used to have its fill of animals and wondered to be so alone on the high track sheltered by trees on the ridge west of me from the cold wind coming in off the river end of September. And a deer was waiting for me at the turn of the path, he stood for me in the song I was singing, stood and I stood and sang not loud and he heard and stood then turned calmly and moved away, and another with them their tails only flirted when they leapt over the little brush along the road and he had told me Merlin, you are Merlin.

for Charlotte

Let the clear weather dear weather remember French the alarm did not go off I overslept from a long French dream of attitude and what do they do to make us beautiful villains at the feast contend for scraps a local amazement fills every local air.

THE MOON LIKE A COMMA IN THE UNREADABLE TEXT OF THE SKY

La lune comme une virgule dans le texte illisible du ciel I said as we drove along and saw it ahead of us four days old and I wanted to make sport of French pomposity and all I did was discover one more truth about the moon.

CUSTOMS OF KING MIDAS

Summer morning low 40°s the pen cold to the touch—Midas is improving, from metal moves on to winter hssst, the kind has icicles instead of ears they tinkle grandly instead of listening

when the wind speaks and everything he touches turns to sorrow sorrow
  —a dream I had it was October a month ahead of where I am mouth open under the golden dug of September my mother)

I called back to you for it was snowing, faintly, white writing on the day of it, Charlotte, look, it's snowing and the long drive I was leaving for —desperate adventures in traffic, Montreal or worse away, Gaspé—was harder now, a danger,
sorrow,

that I forget the rest of the dream, sorrow that we forget our dreams where all our university is hiding to instruct,

the king has clouds in his ears and pays attention only to the weather

I saw their faces last night, all whom I have injured
    and they looked back at me with the long forgiveness of earth forgiving us brightening their faces, no passion to it, no Dostoevskian aria of disdaining to disdain me, just the geologic calm.
I was a wound in them they knew how to heal.

And that was that,
I gave them all my joy, beat of the cascade, the king has waterfalls for ears and drowns the kingdom with his greedy listening.

There was a dream I had in the cold bedroom that it had snowed. Light snow, evening, in a city I was leaving. Living. Leaving.
There was a car and a need to go. There were streets and amusing obstacles—wheels on curbs, wrong way streets, medians and sudden slopes. All went well and I drove into the obscure city we all visit before waking. Silence and the smell of lilacs. Blackness and good morning.
Sorrow on us that we forget the dream, sorrow that we wake and in our hands only the sensation of some cold, gripping the wheel, laughter, Charlotte beside me, my fingers cold, gold, remembering Midas whose asinine ears gave everything away except the dream the king half-animal half-mineral kept to himself, a silent chamber in the core of hearing where he could want without touching and touch without changing and no one spoke.

LA GROLLE

Drinking from The Shoe a dialect of leather made of pottery and pepper filled with eau-de-vie and lemon juice and sweetened with black coffee

I dedicate this round to my friends in the riff business delicate linings have clouds around them you can count me anywhere and never find even a number.

RAIN

for Charlotte

Let it be my skin this water so sensuously sobers.

It's not that I have something to say but that something is.

It doesn't have to make sense it has to say.

3 September 1992
Prayer flags in the rain their colors all but leached away look the better for it, prints of Their Excellencies in thin black lines waverning gentle on the shabby grey cloths delicate in the hard rain unperturbed as mind ought.

Just this morning don't want the hurry to begin.

Portugal is a coast in Europe somebody goes by in a car

I can't prove any of it, hold back the daylight, let me keep this cathedral dusky cloud-soaked tree light,

I'll agree to anything right now agreement turns me on anything you say Gabriele to hold back the day I'd parse the fractions of T'ang bronzes a ting has three legs waiting for the fire aching for wine or what did they warm in it, cocorico, a wave front through the parlor, the chimney clock says anything that comes into its hands how much of all this is you after all seamless webster of a woman's fall redleafed the sweet Interruption even organ music is better than beginning, no more hurry, I am myself the heart of time and being motionless get caught redhanded by the rain.

AND NOW I HAVE OUTLIVED THE RAIN

They have a what was I thinking they had a mourning dove's faint sheen of pink along the bow of breast they have a frame for church bells to hang from but this bat-like destiny is not what I meant

100 rappen to the franc

They have a table underneath a tree a chairlift in all seasons a crow they have a crow

I look down the spyglass of my feelings and see the glass top of the porch table and in it all day long has been today's white rain sky gleaming through the murk of leaves intimate reflection. Is that what I mean?

Döner kebab on the Edgeware Road a ferry schedule a plane?
No, it is more like a weaving frame or harp or printing press or bed.
It's like a bed, a word you can lie down in with your wife.
It is like a wife. They have wet leaves.

3 September 1992
If you say something you're silly since there's so much to be silent about while it thrills through your whole body plowing the virgin field. If you say nothing you are also one of the unrepentant. Reverence for the boundary is all I ask, a wet path along the chalk cliffs. A fire.

4 September 1992
If it really is a burden you can lift it if it really is a flower you can give it to your gods abrupt distinctions piled up on empty words.

END OF NOTEBOOK 201 Startled by sentence I find written in Charlotte's hand, in Tibetan, on the table—from the beautiful white letter A, the wisdom treasure is born

What is born from letters?
Joey holding his mother's hand all through her labor on the birthing stool to bring forth (6:52 A.M., 2 September 1992, Loudonville NY) Miles Roger René Joris-Peyrafitte who holds the letters by the hand draw them from the sky

But the sky is mind, isn't it? pronounced inn’it?

Inuit, Innana, the sky is just down these stairs, turn left at the bottom of your heart,

Bauch,
a belly waits for a princess.
From the Intelligential Heaven a mother wit ascends.

From the beautiful white letter (I'm trying to renew the charge, the battery is dead, so eat the battery like a Babylonian, the Kingdom of Heaven is like unto a rod buried end-down in earth, it casts a shadow by which most men tell the time a wise man pulls it out and hides it in a secret place) But the words are always telling telling, the cruel teacher comes along (as in Louis Lambert) and rips up the boy's philosophy, the word he came to earth to speak (in fear of writing, dark Socrates, stand in the doorway all your hours, breathe the sense of it, don't speak)

his poem,

his heart-habit strivings to declare

what isn't there.

There is a beautiful letter in the air.
I see it time after time, and all I see besides gets born, Aleph, from that sign,

Aleph or Abel, slain into speech.

(I'm trying to renew
that color on the tree, the Kingdom of Heaven may be likened to a book of blank pages on which the sunlight falls casting the shadow of a leaf or leaves a child's finger traces idly

the Kingdom of Heaven may be likened to idleness.

All I know now
I knew at seventeen from the laze life,

all the rest is just experience to order or propose.

There is a silence
(the battery is dead) in heaven (I left the map in your heart) for half an hour (wind the clock).

The beautiful bank teller moves white teller fingers back and forth over money musically

in the magic high and low of counting to me what is mine from me what is everyone's silence earned,

  Pound
among peacocks, insufflator breathing fingerprint powder over scant evidence of the attention we paid

(the Kingdom of Heaven is like a book we read and forget)

Our Lady of the Hours who are you keeping track of us from St John's Church what is born from power settles so calmly into the meek alchemical afternoon

(reading books, taking powders, tea) that without turning our Will to it a person desired comes to our scapegrace door and we let in counting all the wiles of Gideon and Joshua until the courthouse reels overwhelmed with such innocent testimony —all fantasy—spiders living in the drawer a book taken out in moonlight and publicly beaten —hear the thumps and thwacks of the bailiff’s staff until the heart of language lists its haunch (ventricle) hard against the wall.

Hear me, I was man.
I had a pride commensurate with my shadow at evening, an appetite equivalent to Arcady.
Then I was stone.

Shepherds scratched their easy avowals on me and I have repeated through every age the simplistic lovesongs they made me wear, the Kingdom of Heaven is like a ball a child tosses into the sky that does not come down, they thought I understood the words I say, but I am all saying, just saying I am the hand holding your hand and making you strong as I can while you say what you have to say, thus the Kingdom of Heaven may be likened also to rowdy peasants drinking stolen champagne just over the crest of a hill.

THE ROSARY

What the morning lets is something rose an old dried flower in a niello vase and the petals from this cloudy summer they tell me are soft with mold when we come home unfocused flower! every week away is Ithaca with its rats the suitors at the grain the raveled web cracked cistern and still they are flowers, twinned in the slim silly vase, a slip of Edward Gorey work come to us in yard sales, all the Timbuctoos of carrying far meanings into the stock of old words

"self-conscious" = insecure, but selbstbewußt = confident, says Dorothée, the differences.

Who shouts louder at the moon, a dog or an eagle?
And for all the beating wings neither gets the frail apparenency of worshipful Light into her amorous clutches

"I am not the one thing or the other there is a natural attention blue-shadowed now in morning murk but I'll get ready I'll be your Protestant again I'll learn the complex lift of local ocean against this improbable day-sailer with a keel like Christmas hidden hope below the year and off we go to Penikese so I can give myself airs among the other exiles To go with the rosary of experience and let it play saint-wise my fingers until I feel completely just this bead (bird, flower, knob of branch, why rose-ary?)
and nothing else.
A word is always praying to itself for silence.
Who cares what the papers say?
A dove walks on the thick mat of fallen husks from all that fed.
And you are asleep upstairs in the last precious body-guarded minutes before the world.

Bardo of George Bush, with a little music. Here.
A bus goes by on the highway I guess.
I tell you this, adorable posterity, in case these words still mean. Cool breath around my elbows, cries of birds.

CASSANDRA ON FIRST HEARING

for Edward Sanders

She-screams from the he-heart brained into Song

No one is ever believed.
Beauty lasts

is all it does.

---

1Dear Ed, I wanted to say that on our way to the first performance of your magnificent music drama cum oratorio cum manifesto Cassandra, Charlotte and I passed twenty six deer between the river and Woodstock (2+10+3+8+3), some of them very red. Yet it wasn't Iphigenia we saw vanish into mysterium, but your clairvoyance Beyond the Black Curtain. Thank you for the opera, and for the hope it —clearly personally and very unGreekishly— builds out at the end.
Will I live to finish this word will the blue fall out of the sky and be a dark bird humble among us like a penguin lost in the latitudes and a heart? When will the senators break the back of the long sentence that condemns them to futility in pale buildings that taste like soap?

When will the moon forgive medicine for taking the queen of headaches yo tengo out of the back of my skull and let me sleep? Who sleeps?

OBSESSIONAL

I have battled all day against colors using only the sound of water, the roar of seals, the rattling plumage of funeral cormorants hung out to dry and still every leaf mumbles green green green and things once seen stay in the mind burning like Troy but burning forever.

GOOD NIGHT, IRENE

Turned in the cleft of the notch a key speaking Languages against the south holding that crescent moon on its drunken back over a palmetto — you've seen the image — time after time hawks hunted down the flanks of the sky after you, just you.

In your serenity you forgot a man knows how to love you however far you float into the vague shadowplaces of the marshes of Glynn.

The war came and crested on your home terraces, burnt back, stubble in a strew of Christmas snow.

And now may come again. Where are you, to whom a war would try to speak and if you did not answer might yet turn away?

Is silence our best and final politics?

8 September 1992
for Charlotte

The auguries attend us we are waiting for that marriage you and you only understand.
The text is wood the priest is air we find out bed everywhere.

8 September 1992
I have refused nothing but the kiss that says goodnight when there is still time moon and conversation the dark wine effervescent in the bones agony of closeness infugue testimony.
