This project was aided by the help of many people: Formal thanks is more than due to: Drs. Jeffrey Jurgens and Laura Kunreuther for generously offering their vast knowledge, thoughtful input, dedication, support and time in advising this project and beyond. Equally due is thanks to Dr. Megan Callaghan for serving as the third member on my board, always offering encouragement during my time at Bard College, and, most thankfully, peaking my interest in the field of anthropology as my professor of Introduction to Anthropology. Additionally, I would like thank SIT: Students for International Training for accepting me on the “India: Arts and Culture” program during which I began research for this project and spent my month in Shimla; Dr. M. N. Storm, director of SIT India, for her academic as well as personal guidance throughout the Fall 2009 semester; Mr. Raaja Bhasin, resident historian of Shimla, for acting as my mentor during my time in Shimla and leading me through the history of Shimla; and my mother and father, Drs. Cynthia L. Baldwin and Samuel J. Black, for their support in this endeavor, both personal and financial, and, of course, for passing along their passion for academic inquiry. I would also like to acknowledge Mr. Colonel Tejinder Singh, the Director of the Gaiety Theater, for allowing me access to the Gaiety Theater, the theater archives and the theater minutes; Mr. Ved Segan, the architect behind the Gaiety Theater restoration project, for allowing me to investigate his process of restoration, quote his writing, and reference his work; Mr. G. McIntyre for his aid in navigating the libraries of New Delhi (it is not as easy as it may sound!); Mr. Dheeraj Nakra and Mr. Arjun Singh Chauhan for their many hours of logistical liaison work and assistance during my time in Shimla and New Delhi; Hassan-ji for leading me up and down the hills of Shimla and for the many cups of Kashmiri chai (bahut dhanyavad mira dost!); and last, but certainly not least, Bard College for providing the institutional structure for four formative years of undergraduate study like no other, and now, after much hard work, allowing me through the world’s gates with a Bard degree in hand!
