Louis Kenne, newly elected president of the Bard College Forum, the debating and discussion so- cietoy which was established on the campus last fall. The name of The Lyre Tree concerning the aims of the organization was chosen. Mr. Kene's statement followed.

"Last fall a group of men inter­ entered in the Forum of the undergraduates sponsored the Bard College Forum. During the year such questions as the censorship of literature, military training and centralized govern­ ment, government in Eastern Europe, and war and peace were discussed. The Forum sponsored a non-division debate on the question of whether the college should be included in the "list" of the public universities in which the entire audience partici­ pated."

The Conservation of Bard College on Wednesday, May 15, passed the budget for construction for the year 1935-1936. Because of items of the budget being cut and money being appropriated to other schools, students have voted half the expense of the purchase and installation of another projector for the theatre. Also, a room was set aside for student dances. Unlike last year, there was no money appropriated for movies. (Continued on Page Two)

The broad-jumping of Lefever and Perch hit home runs, the former getting three hits and two walks in two walks out of six trips to the plate. At the end of the seventh inning the score stood seven to two. (Continued on Page Three)

Hugh P. Gates '36, who has been active in the work of the Bard Theatre, stated that the current year has submitted to the Lyre Tree a tentative survey of the plans for the Dramatic Department activities for the coming year. Following is his report:

"The Bard Theatre wishes to make closer connections with the other departments of the college in its various activities. Mr. Gates has stated that the art department and the music department should be more closely connected. Information that the various conflicts that have been caused by the lack of the greater advisory council is necessary next year."

Lyre Tree Reorganization

In assuming responsibility for editing and publishing The Lyre Tree for the academic year 1935-36, the newly appointed staff takes cognizance of its functions in the life of Bard College. With the reorganization plans of the college nearing the point of completion, we feel that there is an urgent demand for a reorganized group of student opinion that will adjust itself to new conditions.

The policies of the paper will not be completely formulated until next fall. However, we are prepared to say that most of the news articles which are no longer news to the majority of readers will be put in column form, in an attempt to give more freedom on the part of the writers to present their ideas. We shall endeavor to fill all editorial positions and present the best interests of both the college and the paper. Their plans for the future of The Lyre Tree are well formed and ambitious. Under their guidance the paper will appear even more regularly than it has been in the past.

In every department plans call for expansion. The fact that the Convocation of Undergraduates has seen fit to increase its appropriation for The Lyre Tree, which will make possible many improvements in the publication, is very flattering. We take our leave with full confidence that the new board will give the college a better and a better paper.

Voyage

With what labors, hopes, through stormy seas, O star,
You lead me from the course I meant to steer!
Perhaps this was a faulty guide, too far
From courses that would bring me heart and cheer.
With what great force-retards, why so slow?
You rob me of the powers I have forced
Your sails still seek to take my sail from me.
Yet I do not value some in the light
With what little trouble do the elements may do
The greatest thing to gain the greatest might.
To carry on my busy tasks now—

The Spring intramural tennis tournament was decisively won by the class of 1935, who won in matches against the juniors, sopho-ries, and freshmen. The matches were played informally, with two singles and a doubles team representing each class.

Although the remaining classes have matches to play off, each of them has been defeated by the seniors, and regardless of the outcome of these matches, the seniors first place will be undisputed. The class of 9B was represented by Harry Leever captain and George Knit playing singles; and George Knit and Homer Economos playing doubles.

Dr. Carpenter Takes 5 Students To Canal Zone

Landing aboard about a week before the beginning of the reading period next semester, Dr. Ray, Whi- nter published to make an expedition to Bar la Colorado Island on the mainland of the Canal Zone. Carpenter will take with him three to five Bard students. Although the exact personnel of the expedition is not known as yet, Henry Kerth and Daniel Mcphee will be among the Bard students on the trip.

The purpose of the expedition is to study the habits and activities of New World primates. In addition, Dr. Carpenter plans to capture five howler monkeys for the Sim- burg Zoological Park.

The expedition is being made under the auspices of the National Research Council and the Society for the Study of Social Research Council. The hard students will be retained at postgraduate level by Dr. Carpenter as well as continue to work in their own special fields. In connection with this, Mr. Kerth will probably make a study of tropical birds and Mr. McPhee of the economic exploitation of the Panama Canal and the Canal Zone. The expedition will return about a week after the close of the reading period.

Small Fire In Greek House

Blaze At Noon Discovered By Workmen

A small fire broke out under the third floor of the Kappa Omicron Chi house, on Tuesday, May 28, and was extinguished by the students working on the new athletic field near the house. The fire was quickly put out by the students, and the damage was not extensive.

The fire was caused by the students working on the new athletic field, who were using a gas lantern to light their work. The gas lantern was placed too close to the house, and the flames spread quickly.

The students who were working on the field were not injured, but their clothes were singed. The fire caused no damage to the house or its contents.
