MORNING PRAYER

Right morphs into left and you dream then stop. When you dream a direction, it means a jewel.
North say where the topaz goes.
Hold it in your hand as if you knew.

Go by feel, I always have, and look where I am, a blind man in a pulpit praising God loud as balsam in the autumn woods not yet I am oak. I still have room for doubt — that's you, my othermorph, my thingaleavio, my ought.

A special kind of flesh she brings to judge the world with balanced justly on the rain, the light quivers as she passes, classic Provençal, a word called out from the café terrace, summoning strange trees. She is bringing food but I think I smell her hands.

STIMULUS TIME

Being ready to be gone.

Earth barrier.

Port of Pain.

Ships sailing map presence on the abstract movement.

Wave. Be
there for me, pirate.

Yield
your haunches to the alarmed piano, the sudden sense that music makes somehow your fingers are workmen in that black factory struggling to find the natural silence hidden in each thought after the frenzy of thinking it subsides and the ship floats calm now on the other hand of the moon rises I notice only for you.

Otherwise the whole sea is black with scribbles, did I write it,
or night did it or God did or some lover sending frantic mail?

Halfway
out of my mind I made a left turn down a quiet corridor where shadows were waiting for me,

you were one among them, shadow
with such light eyes, part of my house I'd never seen before have to share with you now

something moving something still.

FROM THE TAMIL

This boy is her girl friend.

Enough
with all our fancy differences, enough. This really is that,

the love they make works both sides of the street sundark shadelight she.

The machine goes on machining and she screamed in her soft voice then felt soothed by my agreement.

They are against us. And we too are not what we suppose.

She nodded, she had all evening been sure that I was not the real me, not the one she'd known in Christmases past, what I was was just one more resembler but she spoke to me tenderly for the sake of the likeness.

And because there was nobody else.

MARGIN IS MEANING

The edge of anything is where the taste begins is strongest, truest to its difference

At the margin the difference begins the difference that heals the distance all the weary while you've come from the last situation you understood when someone said Touch me and you did.

And now the sky is flying by, it too wants to reach the edge of the world where something else begins

But you have fooled the sky tricked heaven once again, the thing beyond the world you keep hidden in your pocket.

DARKEST MORNING

But who hangs a photometer on a tree to set a number to the day's light?

I want to wait to see so much kindly rain green light of mildew here and here glistening the corners

√mel- miel, mellitus, mead all cognates of that word the honey left in English

PANDORA'S BOX

why do I hear the book's feet shuffling down the dry passage but such bright blood, arterial, spreads open, book suddenly love's lap.

TAKEN MEASURES

Lift a stone to gauge the rain three inches yesterday and the day before halfway to heaven you say only half a prayer don't joke about the kindness of the Gods, the mind that minds you while you sleep from one situation to the next, the bribes of love always ready in your purse in case you wake.

ENVOI

Tell her for me the clock is off the tower and the moon has fallen one more time for her own reflection so drowned her light and the sun for grief is hiding clouds shield earth from tragedy old shepherd mourning for his goat.

And the tower itself for all its height is stretched along the ground — did she hear it fall?

how can we explain the bricks and stones and playing cards the clock hands big as pikes cracked bells and dented trumpets spilled along the gleaming mud of morning?

how can you tell your little son what you have done?

3 September 2003

THE AFTERTHOUGHT

How can you explain to your conscience that the most important person in your life is one for whom you are not even a person, just an object, a factory of milk, a smile?

TWO LANDSCAPES

1.

Always something waiting there.

Tear the page out and the book falls apart.

We are stuck with the whole text, goldfinches pecking thistle seed.

Last thing before sleeping the shadow of a wolf your hands make on the wall bite the light off and sleep happens like a cry of pain.

3 September 2003

What is the name of the seed no bird will eat no plant will grow but the furthest stars are embodied by,
oil of fire, spill of sense, shout in the night?

TIME CODE

They called them gods when they and we were young and now we say the stone, the sea, the sun.

Deity also (even) is a phase, a road stop in a long night, we don't know what follows it, whether such nights ever end.

But we love the highway, the blue gold California of it,

I lick the glistening wet road.

ORIGIN

Bird seed again? The cry from the middle of heaven, Or is it sunshine through clouds today for the first time? Time is a fortress under siege. Are we weather?

That's where all the rain comes from—what we don't know about ourselves.
Origin. Blue stone at the top of the sky.

“EXAGGERATE” THE “OBVIOUS”

Some words I like too much, or not so much like as hear them to begin.

Heap up what is right there on the path in front of you you can't get by.

Whatever is there is like a dream you wake from but can't get rid of, its dramatis personae trail behind you through the day, sometimes darting ahead so that the Korean girl ahead of you on line is the one who ninety years ago read all those books and came to make love to your best friend whoever that turns out to be and all morning you've fretted about what that could possibly mean, Prague, lesbians, cave lined with tapestries, are you even still alive?

Caught between dream and downtown what can a man do? Get a haircut.
Visit the interior of the mall — by distilling the obvious all round you, you will find the hidden stone.
Listen close while she snips your sideburns, with a blade so close, who needs a flower?

Who needs forever?
Whisper by whisper you hear your hair fall as if someone very far away with a little piece of silk was polishing a stone.

RELIABILITY

I am not organized that way.

I am hollow but not bamboo.

When you build your house on me you're like those Irish voyagers who landed on a snoozing whale one night and slept sound on what they thought an island.

But morning is a swimming time and gone.
