even on vacation Saturday morning wakes thinking politics, i.e., kill this cut off that. This surgery of state.
As if utopia came from cutting things away.

It does. Call it nirvana half an hour when the bars close and the buses stop running and men sleep where they fall between a lost sense of responsibility and the first skeptic haze of dawn because eventually work comes back and if you're lucky it's your work that calls you, your own, coquelicot, your own cow to milk or stairway to build out of lapis lazuli leading to the easier stars.

squirrels running up a tree are talking about me

I hear my name
when the wind blows

when the floor creaks someone is coming towards me every sound is an accusation

it is good to have a wall and my back to it no one comes at me from behind but maybe that's how

I really wish they'd come silently with no names just their sudden revelation and I fall.

When the shadow of the blue glass bowl is also blue, the plain sun coming through it flushes the shadow here and there with light.

Morning. Half shadow half reflection.
Who can argue with a color. Yet I do, for your sake, mysterious envelope

I fill with noisy intimations (interruptions of what?) any number of you will read in silence, maybe perched half-dressed on the windowsill reading by the glow of the insanity behind you, city, you, worried about windows, hysterical with doors.

Suppose I could take advantage of my connections with the royal family and smuggle you into Bhutan so you could finish your research on kinship structures while I wait for you in the comfortable bordertown buying artifacts and arguing with myself over tea whether I should learn Bengali or calculus first.
We have only so many chances, I call up my pal at the ministry of mountains, whisper your coordinates and he takes care of you while I sleep, you help him with his English, everybody knows something of use.
And what am I supposed to do with my time?
I think about your silhouette coming towards me once in the spice market in Siliguri among colorful thieves, I recall my desire for you more keenly than I feel desire, was this one more blown chance, and was I Popeye with dyspepsia, pas d'épinards, a sitcom satirist, bluebeard on strike? And why is this all about me, what are you doing? When does your silhouette come home so I can feel the complex curve your equation scribbles into three-d space? It is you.
Structures are complete as soon as you notice them.
All that going away was just a dog lost in a fog.

PILGRIMAGE

The nature of surprise is overtake.

Etymology curbs the illiterate heart a while, dissipates the charge of the beloved's moniker and leaves you comfortably arguing with the dead.

With what Augustine said. And Dante.
The old Love Club nattering in the sky.
It takes a while to come back to the fact.

You're alone. The other is busy othering far away. The wood that dreams are made of is an endangered tree, in slim supply, no one's dependable in the dark.

So what to do. Shut up and open up.

Get out of yourself and go, as the Bible (first of all those coffee table books) told Abraham to do. Get lost and find her.

Him. Staying is pure poetry. And the only cure for poetry is to go.

Which is I suppose why I can't write on the morning of journeys, at least not till the airport or the train.

Amazing that Bashô did what he did, when he could have just described every venue —that breathless '747 poetry' of the tourist (like my Oahu). Amazing that he was able like a good Buddhist to find staying right in the heart of going.

ARCHES

No arches in deltas.

The music's flat and keeps on going.

Horizons
are busy with the heart.

So much plodding, so many streams to ford on broad wet stones so many levees to mooch along being sad about the weather

The sky can't hold itself up, the sky is drunk, keeps flopping down on the earth, the sun has set,
there's no lamppost in the sky
to hold it up, hold us,

my feet are flat
I walked too long

I saw the one I thought I loved at the edge of every marsh across from me, the loved face hidden among timothy and sea grass and the birds settling down for night I followed, over the wooden catwalks, gravel sidewalks, dust roads and all the time the sky was on my collar and the river branches shuffled to the sea always another mouth, flat feet and sad music call all the names love claimed to be and you kept listening like a bird listening to life inside the tree and none of the names sound right not even 'you' my favorite, busy walking as you are in search of me find me find me I can't walk so far as where you are with the sky lying so heavy on the earth you're just like me we both have far horizons no dearth of rivers so all the words run backwards just as well, tide pools, estuaries, vague suscipients of so much weather oh you you have a way of bringing all sorrow to one point, two points, the emerald lies of your amazing eyes, amber insinuations, obsidian silence

until the world's pain presents itself in you controllable and overwhelming sad.

Is this a song?
My feet are old and cracked with all this loving I can't tell if my bones weigh down my meat or my flesh weights down my bones, I love you, I mean the horizon's just as far away as ever. Even the sky is flat.

What I mean is always so far I used to pray you'd come to me while I was on the way to you now I just want to get there wherever it is, keep singing and pray I don't die drunk.

Leviticus love the dangerous when the skin becomes a book and pigeons stalk your shadows and you have read the wrong word what then? Life is defilement.

I read you hard I spread you open I breathe into your dark I call your name

This happens and happens again and will always happen there is no distance built into our nature the distance is a mistake of attention

I have failed everything I mean

GLANCES OF LOVE AND MALICE.

(out of John Aubrey)

1.

AMOR ex Oculo Love is from this is the most important geography

love is a departure not a destination

Le Havre
receding through the smokes and mist

the eye: but more by glances than full gazings;

and so for malice.

Tell me dearest, what is Love ?

'Tis a Boy
they call Desire

Mr. Fletcher
called it
Cupid's Revenge.

3.

divine and inexplicable strange walks the streets sometimes meet with an aspect of male that pleases souls; and natural nature, we could rely

One never saw the other Gaze not on a maid, saith Ecclus

4.
Glances of envy and malice do shoot also subtilly the eye does infect and make sick the spirit of the other after triumphs, the chymist can draw subtile spirits will work upon one another at some distance, spirits coelestial (sal armoniac and spirits of work each other half a distance, and smoke

"Non amo te Sabati, nece possum dicere quare, Hoc tantum possum dicere, non amo te".

But if an astrologer had their nativities he would find a great disagreement in the schemes.

These are hyper-physical opticks and drawn from the heavens infants very sensible of these irradiations of the eyes for fear of fascination in Spain they take it ill if one looks on a child and make one say God

We usually say witches have eyes.

The political ideas of one's friends always come as a shock. I myself turned out to be a Zionist, an anarchist, or monarchist if I get to play king.
We rot our hearts with such contriving.

And philosophers are the first to kill.
Hence the famous not-at-all misunderstanding in Julius Cæsar, play by a man haunted by the grandiose follies of sheer being a special person, to be a king instead of playing it. The way he did and even then the king was dead.

Let that be my politics. To be the ghost of a king walks around a city that once might have been mine.

Yesterday the light and clarity of the afternoon were so real it could have been virtual.
Now we make realer than real without surreal at all, not yet alas, you bird apart from moi.

14 January 2002

Accent acute on the grave and we are carved into the world.

The name lasts a little longer than the man except in mountains where the ice has a mind of its own

I met a man asleep there on his side five thousand years he didn't wake and both of us went on dreaming.

Why did I set myself to write five short pieces every morning?

I wonder if because I knew a longer one would have to be about you

I have to be quick and short because you have the trick of thinking me.

What is it we'll rehearse?
A play without a curtain, a concerto for no instrument just you and me striving to be true to nakedness.

To be each other.

 Don't you know a whole life is a rehearsal for our life, a wild becoming on the way to be, heaventrack and architext of fire, don't you?

We are heaven happening when the doubt goes out.

fling from me the text of other men's imaginings I will be cosmologue my own to break the dark crystals and suck the light out you need from me only from me and for such purposes woke from a dream that ran from the end of daytime into the beginnings of the dark
