if you live your whole life among electrical devices you become one yourself in a power failure you go too or just creep by on some sluggish low drain default until the sun rises out of the socket again and you can do.

Revive Matter. Be a materialist.
A little girl in a yellow pinafore steps her silver little scooter up the hill.
To a view of the sea, which belongs to all of us, First Matter, motherwit and alphabet.

Powerless? The waves are power, rush in whiter than ever creaming on every reef in the bight splaying on the shore

All night we hear them but even now at noon they're loud enough white enough, high enough coming in hard out of the sun haze up Vineyard Sound from freedom so near at hand, the People's Republic of the Sea.

Being overboard and home being home

the day was an island that began powerless except to leave the long conversation and I had nothing to say to the sea just more cheesy love poems and the power was out as if the island didn't have anything to say o it all is leaving, it all is leaving and in New Bedford the battery was dead, but twenty five dollars and a sweet mechanic my age in what he called an old red truck but that was brown and grey, these got us started so we could crawl in heavy rainfall through heavy traffic past King Philip's War and into Providence and thus north to the pike into sunset rainbow and mountain clouds the shifty chamber music of the sky, deer and delves and empty highways we must have been doing something right (wrong) to get us home so beautifully (with so much trouble) on such roads. Vehicle rhymes with obstacle the words end in the same lost key. Now sleep we go and sleep late, the tide can take care of itself and even though we've been gone two weeks the sun still knows how to rise. (Home rhymes with ego.)

Could this be summer?
Could the rapture of resistant closure complicate the seaside reveries of Proust?
And that band of energies he gently called filles knowing that they come down from heaven to bless us with torment enrapture us with their passages of quick going, their leaps of pure staying?
Could they actually be girls?

Everybody thinks so once in a while and then the tropics come and make our night as long as our day and we can choose the busy mosquito hum of darkness where we dream or the waking languor of a terrible hot silent day most of us live in dream the beautiful gizmos around us mere garrison work armor for our interminable enterprise inside

we are the batteries on which they live highflying gestures projected on the stages of the ancient Roman theater, arena in our heads, the knob of Calvary rising bleak between the Shoulder Mountains.

NEWS FROM TIBET

We learn from Dzog-Chen:

The codons
Are people.

WHY MEDITATION IS NECESSARY

Millennia ago we migrated Into the human form

We chose the best animal we could find Fit more or less for our purposes

It's not perfect
Yoga meditation minimizes the imperfections of the body

Revises physiology
And puts us in control,

That is, Awareness of our original nature and condition.

INSECTS

There the surf was all night music here the katydids and the voices of the permanent majority on this planet, huge democracy in which I am permitted with a few others of the mammal kind by dint of size

it takes a long time for them to swallow us down.

28 June 2000

ENSAYOS

Are we mammals kept on earth As food for insects?

Do they keep us as their hogs and sheep?
Are we Leviathan
And do they, the chosen ones, the multitudinous of earth, Feed on us in accordance with scripture,

Do they keep us handy and fatten us, So many of them so few of us,
And all their myriads feed on us.

So maybe human consciousness Is an emergency-triggered thing Whereby we try to rescue ourselves from them, Occasional, fitful rebels against the vast majority of life?

Did the mammals breed humans To lead them in the war against the insect hordes?

They can't kill us, despite rogue anopheles.
They need us for their food.

LES AMANTS

Room for one more flyer in the sky fish In the sea do you have room for me In your little life you boundless charmer? All

The power in the universe could not manage To wedge one more star into the sky.
Don't ask me to finish what your mother started.

THE EXPLOIT

What pushes one over Niagara is the suck of water down, the arrant gravity of the occasion, the fall by which your barrel temporarily takes leave of anything you can count on without for even a moment abandoning the flow while you flood into eternity the same sure decent way color floods the October leaf that which sustains us finally lets us fall, the crowd looking on from the shore adores you with indifferent eyes.

Wine me rush to seize her spilled as if atop a kirtle or knot of air as tiles are slipped over one another's shoulders we imbricate the world with consciousness over an underweening torpor of sundazed rock, depends on who we are in your theodicy, tradesman.

Your miracles are glib but glad at least to find their mirrorer in me.

Half-closed on lying rockshelf glacier Rondout spilled a fever hasty mosquito

o or I was above all that armature in window spilled only ever

because they in potteries a glaze applied in season
'broccoli reddens'

midEaster transport rock Roodt Eylandt from the clay she masked a made

'blue devil contemplating Rome' a hill of bites less shale for timothy supper

dour nation of syllables speak a cigarer, sparrow, lean upon middle a curried Schimmel pale as death's own pony on her way to college battering at the club gate tibia to template or groove galliard weather dance me douce me over design your Rockies granitely narrable vista ginger from a stone jar pickled pleases senatorial aspirants by dint of savor delicate hurt her heart's proclaimer vexed in that mystic sauna ashram in India

work hard and suck short views be a vacation when the candle slides slippery vector in and out of the dark perdition where one forgets the causes and conditions sleep alongside me.

THE NUCLEUS

A kind of Nagasaki moment When the imaginable worst comes Back again even worse than before And the world is just something that hurts.

29 June 2000

I want the Pléiade edition of the weather the encyclopedia of everything the thousand volumes of the History of Flowers the never ending Annals of Desire.

Red Hook

Suppose I am a candle.
What does that make you?

Or a curtain falling on a badly written scene the audience finds it hard to understand, a tedious play in darkness with an invisible heroine whispering the awful truth, aren't I the same as glass?

When the light goes out does darkness come in different colors different flavors? Or is the wind always under new management?

We have read all the signs.
A moon appears to last longer than I do.

And the world is raining.

A map is a piece of paper from which the words have washed away.

If I had a small enough vocabulary I could say everything, and say it right.

DISJUNCTION AS A UNIFYING PRINCIPLE

Notes on any qasida, Quasha's Preverbs of Tell, and such enterprises — the subtle heresies of Zero Motivation.

No formal pressure. Language is arbitrary.

Or only language is arbitrary.

But no use of it is — every linguistic gesture we perform is motivated (totally, as they'd say) by all previous gestures we've made or had made round us.

So the goal of poetics is to rescue and restore the arbitrary.

But words press on one another, no matter what we do. Beneveniste deconstructs Saussure's arbitrariness of the sign.

No content pressure — language is formal.

Its formality is the angel of the arbitrary .

A prayer preys on itself, or on God.

A prayer, language tells us, is a throwing away, a casting up, out.

But prayer is an -er word, nomen agentis, marked by the sign of One-who-does-the-verb-in-question.

So the prayer itself is the doer of the praying. The one who 'says' the prayer is just a witness, and perhaps not the only one, of the praying praying, the pray-er enacting itself.

This tells us a little, perhaps more than we knew, about a line of poetry, and the one who 'says' it — speaks it in mind or writes it down on paper.

Give fire to the fire, said the great poet-chemist Michael Maier: Giving fire to the fire = putting language to language. Writing it down.

Abandon words to language. Then they will be clean. Let language talk for you — then you'll discover what you really mean.

Language knows better than you do.

Principle of the lapsus freudianus: what says itself, really says me.

Be touched by it. Or swagger down the cranberries. Birds makes leaves move, micro-adjustments in The Machine.
Chipmunks chase chipmunks, mitochondria rewrite galaxies inside. The principle of Conservation of Consciousness I declare, your serenity wakes them up. You are enrolled in the machine from the beginning.
Ignore me. I'm waiting on line just like yourself.
Query: what if the posse of commuters waiting on the corner had already been picked up by the bus but never noticed the transition moment, never saw it, never remembered, still think they're standing on the street?

DEVIENS CE QUE TU ES

Become what you are, said the Lacoste ad, a girl showing her belly button, to prove in case we doubted from her sleek perfection that she too is an exile, daughter of Eve.

We read about Rehoboth, keep It in mind. Learn to pronounce it, old town, Massachusetts. Last stand of Anawan, King Philip's chief.
Beheaded, quartered, the king.
Trapped, executed, the minister.
Big rock near Rehoboth. Learn to pronounce judgment on the murderers, the long shabby crime of history.
Or do I make too much of death?
Was there some entity I forgot more important than living consciousness?
To cut that off is to cut everything.

СТРАВИНСКИЙ

Somehow we don't hear him so much these, our cynic airs need to be dumber than he would let us be, his sneer we could live with but not his passion, that lover's sarcasm (he had loved everyone), his lyrical despair. How could we keep our footing there?

30 June 2000

One spot talks to another.
The other spot listens and what it hears sinks in.

The spot is now a pore.
In this way the skin is made that holds us in.

The Greeks (who had no word for a living body) called this Okeanos, the endless beginningless ocean, river that runs all round our world, around everything that we experience.

Whatever and wherever it seems to be We experience it inside. Our brains, our hearts, the little city in the core of us.

So I send you a tourist postcard from it: Inside my skin, listening hard.

Adjustments of the diamond kind a plea for grace

— it is balance, isn't it, a blessing between source and destination, a wave of giving rolling over the trivial obstacles between.

Do you know how to eat rocks?
Only water, only salt.

The lordly carbon deep inside the actual heart the real blue diamond.

Answer.
Turn them into light. And then remember.
