WEEK

On Monday we’re in trance and moony doze half nightmare go to work.

On Tuesday we fight, we struggle against our situation, we go to work, we strive against the endless of spill of us into them.

On Wednesday we barter thing for thing or word for referent.

On Thursday we get our wind back and hope ascendeth like a spinnaker on the horizon.

On Friday we try to make love with everyone, even though everybody tastes of work. Everything is possible, though, even ourselves.

On Saturday we kick back and hate the government, we trim the hedge and hate the grass.

On Sunday we pretend it all means something else. God’s plan. Football game.

16 November 2011
Long line of cars lemming their way to work. Such a fascinating display of meaningless possession, freedom in compulsion. Each man a king in his car, proudly wheeling on his way to being a slave in someone else’s fantasy.

Business! The phantom of meaning in the bonehouse of work.

THE WAY WEST

Capture a bonnet.
Annihilate some snow.
Now it is prairie, now it is go.

Use the animal that eats grass or let birds do it go and come back.

The other side of the mountains will always be the other side even when you get there.

The Otherners will welcome you seize you with a mother’s kiss—no more grass! No more ox!

The sea is staring at you and passing over it fast the shadow of a new kind of bird.

I think I’ve gotten it all wrong.
It should mean not wanting but being.
Being with what and as one is.

A troupe of frightened girls runs away through the vigorous topiary and hedge mazes.
All the images disperse.

One is left with the one who thinks of emptiness.

Sometimes it’s enough to look at the light, cozy light of a November mid-morn not raining. Drink it in sips of it, tree light, road light, overcast silvery sky light. Enough.

The shapes of light surround us. Light is orderly but exuberant, fills everything, sculpts the shade. Quiet light right now is best late light of morning makes my skin look part of the world.

But music won’t let go.
The neighbor’s dog
never stops barking.
Music’s teeth sink in,
the hurt of it starts to feel not so bad, can’t live without it, music
needle, music air,
can’t drive your car
without it, the bark of it follows everywhere,
makes you invisible
among the hordes
of the other invisibles.
Subjects of music.
Music is a blind eye.

THE SHOEHORN AND THE ALPENSTOCK make merry with your gravity.

Topple in your woolen socks.
The mountain waits, the leather squeals around your soles speaking in its native Pig.

This is about climbing.
This is about human disposition to be doing something. Anything. More ergs than sense, this us. What would happen if we sat still? Just get fat? Or is there (here comes the sermon) another mountain out there, one we climb by silence, by being moveless as the mountain is? Climb by becoming it suddenly alone with the sky?

SPECIES OF FEAR

Blue love nests
concealed by horizon

you wonder who is here waiting for you on the satin clouds the terrible girl tree

I gave you in dream

all map and no island

you live inside my body whose?

2.
Scare tactics
police at the door open the cloud

look, the horizons really are getting closer
it’s not your eyes
the desert was never like this before you got here

a car the color of the road it goes on so what so what so what.

3.
Call it a miracle
you know I like that word

let me see your lip curl back and say it in Latin miraculum, a little thing to look at.

¡Mira! she said, el tigre mi corazon.

poem stupid dreams of waking men never awake.

Then women.
4.
Or just the way things really are.

You wonder we all do who planted it

how many years to grow a consensus concealed in language that holds us in the mesh of ssaying

how to break a cloud

#Occupy word.

5.
Fish hook
snagged in jeans cuff you never should sacred life

blue potency in a green mind

will she ever come back taste of her travel

wait wait nothing means me now climb the greased flagpole catch the greased pig.

6.
Call it the county fair instead a tract of land for each and every friend close to the coast of me costa, a rib.

Cage of hearts
talk to me ever
ear on your belly

universal predator
fangs of desire

I thought the sun this morning was you calling me.
7.
Who could they be this you this me

remember shoepolish subways whistling
in the vegetable section choosing oranges
and no organic?

I pose for my picture wearing my own face

a liar to the last.

“To know your body
the way we take a walk in the woods slowly lowly going nowhere

leaves of all those years old wood and new birds

nowhere to go so close we know the same place.”

UNTRAVEL

Wispy clouds of blue winter an unformed word

alphabets are everywhere each letter of each one an island

III

or a mountain
breaking into your purely local sky

dear beekeeper, dear integer.

2.
A pallid newcome waiting almost hearable
shadow deep inside the rock

To take more time on everybody’s side in the shade and watching sun harvest habits

coal black and out of it this lily corn
to slap the lily
the way the wind does do a different thing each time a hawk over Hercules name this town after that and live between

o settlers learn how to dine on air darling the nutrient light.

3.
Deadly aplomb
the way a nurse is lost the label

kept the coat

so many Saturday dogs
you wonder why

every pet represents a failure of language preclusion of love
I anger you this way
to clear your heart.

4.

In three days the leaves once they started
are gone from the hibiscus.
Neighborhood watch
who steals the leaves?

5.
My head was empty that long moment listening to the night chanting and what light there was kept me from seeing.

And where do they go,
the cars? They go by,

for Bradley

Being impossible
alone with your body
in a huge world

sweat of the sun

living her life
in your own skin

healing her.
Heal by hearing her until you hear

the whole fierce silence of the desert air.

THE COSMOLOGY

How it happened:
the secretary chased
around the desk
became the sun.
Her somber boss
follows her still,
waxing, waning waxing.

19 November 2011
I am a hidden treasure

I have sought out and found the way to be me
and not otherwise.

I wait for you there
at the sunset, pool,
little hill, a tree

mountains everywhere.

20 November 2011
My defenses fell away my roses lost their thorns and suddenly there were lakes on every side

look we try
so hard to imagine it cathedrals rising again without the inconvenience of belief strong fingers scratching at the sky and room for all of us inside, no sunlight to break through the thicket of symbols.

The images fall away and leave me only with things seen.
I rub them on one another to make a cricket music, insect cunning, Attic clever, whale drone, wind in a copper bowl, plastic sewer pipes humming in the cold.

20 November 2011
The lack of music breaks the air there never is enough to breathe and the runner’s shadow gets there before he does—we follow phantoms!

But to live without the provocations of mediated desire! To be home in the world as a thingy place no further than your arm can reach—a book, a sleeve in corduroy, beech tree bark, jug of laundry bleach.
