Spirit breathes out and comes back what it has found out there:
spirit breathes in. Spirit pauses to unload the spiritual freight it has charged itself with on its brief furlough from the lungs.
Now it is home, rests, runs to breathe out again.

This breathing business feeds the body's sensory input the life of meaning by which we live. The little breath that goes so far, is changed charged, returns, restores.
The fourth dimension unseen all round us keeps us alive.
We die in three.

POLTER

commotion, ruckus, noise. children running in the hall. Noise is their nature and their medium.
Hats fall off. A south wind harps the wet branches.
I hear that too, I woke hearing the pillow noises of sleep, rolled over and heard rain.
Almost miracle enough.
Chanson. Naked dancers in Rio.
Ash Wednesday over Yankee roofs.
Sunday. Wet cars congregate round the Temple of Fitness whose scripture is the flashing measurements of their exertions, speed, pulse rate. Their Mass.
Visible indices of grace.
We have come a long way from 1963. Can anyone remember the last time we slept?
Before the Scarlet Woman squatted on our faces and the chests of suicide bombers exploded all over the springtime streets?

Valley choked with snow
the hillside bare.
The meaty no-color of new bared earth ready for time.

Malted privilege.

Disguise of lover night.

Disordered Sheraton sideboard scraps of silver, sobs of gold.

Anubis waiting at the gate

he carries with him

to dignify your plain-Jane door.

Shabby house. He comes fetch you to that field

all sandy underneath the grass

the sand is stars

the grass is you.

The field is the sky.

But what had the weather known to set us here so close to the piano when the barber still has three customers ahead before I can bare my foramen to Serapis, lord of bulling your way through adversity, death included, and even the multitudinous afterlife—jackals, gateways, murmured texts.
I went to sleep reading, woke up inside the book—Someone To Watch Over Me I think but it's been a long time.

Did you get my note?

Did you understand what I meant?

If so, you're smarter than I am/

I just had this bunch of words and wanted to give something to you.

It snowed again and Chopin now-life is so corny sometimes no wonder we think the way we do all love affairs and muffins, wars and little dogs ladies lead through the snow.

But it asked, you told,
something broke.

Time

story. Poor little boy answering daylight all your life with stuff you stole in dreams.

All things want you
and you want all things—peace! Lift your fingertips in that archaic gesture, peace, a sign, the long jihad in your head goes back to sleep.

Mozart.

Carly Simon's butt on the jacket of Playing Possum.
Everything is so long ago again.
Even all these words are already in the dictionary.

Mozart's string quintet Number One in B flat goes by fast, hurrying like daylight like the millrace outside every town.
Build a city without churches and don't let anybody in. A viola will always find its way to sneak in, one more beautiful intruder impersonating God in the marketplace.

Overdone day.

Organ everywhere.

Don't make everything

drunk or divine,

there has to be some method

where men and women can live without answers

and no one can watch them

not even the rain.

Today's the day the dead
all year have been waiting to go go, and the green almost ready to revert to trees the long conversation interrupted last October o calendars
you are eerie friends
you smell of musk and accident o days you are green and red and the snow knows everything and sleeps.

Keep wanting more wake, woke—weep mountain law. make smoke-ban the old laws scrape the new foam from sea rocks

no more mountains! be taught by seas!
agitate nurture advance caress possess!

if I did have a law it would be the poet Homer turning away in terror from what he's just said.

So little said, so much understood.
The river smites the warrior, the man wounds the god.

Marx was wrong about one little thing—it was already a comedy from the beginning.

Alternatives meet here
cancel one another out.
This is India 1983.
I have come at last
to where I'm supposed to be, sitting by a tombstone
in another religion on a hill monsoon. Everywhere is where I began. But this place above all, between Nepal, Bhutan, Bengal,
China over the crest.
I have come
beyond my language,
the calm wet air
a lullaby to put the old me to sleep.

Strange bird makes blue inhabitants scurry
through the settled alphabets of trees—made out of branches palimpsests
naked to our glossaries meager guesses at what they
and not we actually say let alone what they mean.

An owl, maybe, bedayed?
A horizontal hawk?

Movement is enough to tell—
there are no agents
in the real world,
we are happened even as we speak.

In an hour maybe
I will go out and be them.

Anybody waiting understands the myth of mistletoe—
some kinds of love
are pure revenge—
after all those kisses
its juices killed
blind Cupid in the north.

All the things that letters mean.

Pictures of them.

Alphabet blocks for the ages:

V vagina Venice vein vixen violet Venus and we will build our poetry out of the 26x5 images the blocks permit—or leave out the letter itself and have x6

so we have to know the letter from the picture shown.

Victoria the Queen. Hidden alphabets.

Implicit letters. Then spell your words with these and see of what images your Liberty consists.

Six sides of the wooden alphabet block

= six lines of the hexagram.

No identity. There is only recollection, that strange kind of remembering we call similarity.

Without memory no likeness.

10 March 2011

= = = = =

No similarity. I pull the children safe off the street onto the sidewalk.
I rescue the birds from the sky.

I worry a lot. Anxiety also is a species of prayer.
Worry about the fate of the gods, eve.

Who worships Aphrodite now oh I do and you do but who are we,
and who brings anymore fresh seafoam to splash on her marble altar?

When in doubt,
reverse it.
Reverence reveals.
Reverence
amplifies the real.

In mute undress
they made 'em
there are ramparts
where some fly
some fall some flatter music on their fallow-flutes gearing up for gallows-time, publish and punish, the maidharceled armies of might.
