3-2013

marC2013

Robert Kelly
Bard College

Follow this and additional works at: http://digitalcommons.bard.edu/rk_manuscripts

Recommended Citation
http://digitalcommons.bard.edu/rk_manuscripts/200 sit on my lap
and tell me a story,
tell me many
all at one time,

the story your lips
say and the story
your hips tell
moving to find ease

and your knees
talk too, swinging
forward and back,
all the adjustments

a body must explain to be with another
of its kind, the stories we can’t stop telling

although we try,
closing our mouths
as if that could ever silence what we say.

10 March 2013
DRAWING-ROOM BLUES: Ellington & Strayhorn

Might be able to but why don’t you?

This wine is from no grapes the cup spills all over the table gets your satin soaked with sunlight juices

and down in the stable those white horses kick against their stalls they want some too
whatever it is,

horse melancholy
mouths full of sugar cubes, why does the lady come down with dark in her hands and rub ashes on their silver coats?

How can I guess the beauty in somebody’s dream that sends her, but I do, how can I ride a horse on the other side of the wall, but I do, right through the window, break the glass easy as a piece of cheese wondering where all your bread has gone o lady where is my after all, where is my bread, and how vague my desire is even now, even for the horse, your very own horse.

10 March 2013
Voices in the night
all in me, all my voice only a few phrases can I rouse to capture three voices from one mouth take off the dragon girth, hard landing the scrub of skin

against the dawn
the hurrying

only scraps left from that transmission, I tried to sleep again, I slept, for hours, and still more voices, yielding to now.

What is the meaning of a thing in a dream, a clean bare new café with a pretty girl in charge, her brother the chef, but across Tinker Street a new much fancier brasserie full of people.
But nobody here. What does it mean in this Café Muoc, and I resolved to help this bare place win custom, I touched her face
the scrub of skin
what is this all about, no story here, it’s bland and blank and quiet, where are all the roaring dragon prophet voices that I heard coming out of my dream mouth, and the lost words

the memory of something important I said that isn’t here when I need it.
Here in this clean new empty place nothing interesting here except maybe the name the woman said.

11 March 2013
1.
Welcome rain
calendar soaked
welcome daylight
princess in a folding boat scattered pleasures of a householder
lost on the map
catless coatless heart asleep.

2.
Morningstar skipped this house woke so late pilfering light from raindrops hear them in the downspout making a noise like a prayer wheel clacking
years ago in another rain.

3.
Everything always reminding.
Video games will produce a nation of isolated geniuses.
Fact. A white car vanishes in trees.
4.
Rumpelstiltskin was his name then now he is young and glamorous but still wants what he can’t have

by the nature of things her long hair her air of not really caring what he does.

5.
Folklore ws my ferly.
I bided your time,
crossed your T’s,
I swarmed down
the smell of your roses and all the new words started to fall apart, a mushroom and a little man beside it, eyes a-glint with love or something like it, pale amber needles of the pine big as spears by his tiny feet. Who art thou? I enquired and he: I am the one they find beneath
all the words they ever knew, spoke or kept still—
I am what is left,
I am your will.

6.
You never can tell
what time will do,
gone today and here tomorrow like the moon on her back in the sea or like the blackbird whistling in the year’s last snow just before you woke you maybe heard. Or like Monday all over again.

7.
But what could he know,
spirit in the rigging topsails of the house the sea of earth beneath it heaving, this way to dawn
immaculate mischances of the wind strokes everyone in passing, your deck flies home
a flock of tarot cards birding through the infraspace until even I can tell a tree from a longboat—they swarmed ashore slapping their broadswords on their chests to make a great groaning in the air and the story closed again around him.

12 March 2013
She stands in the wheat field looking for music
the wind hears her
the crow the wind everything the same but the sun a face she knew and then forgot she forgot the sun

and stood in the pond
the blue wave slipped between her thighs
and she was born again as grain born again as a bird

busy in the sky
over all this she is born as the sky too often to be the sun

she has forgotten who she was supposed to be so she has to be born again born of the sound of water the wind in the wheat field the crow calling and calling again to someone she can’t see she has to be born again from what she hears.

12 March 2013
I can't hear you I'm me

All I can think about is Vienna not so many years ago quiet Sunday morning the horses clattering around the church even before the bells,
all I can think about is how I knelt (did I really kneel?) at the tombs of dead emperors grieving for the state, that there is such a thing as a state and now not even pretty or gilded or with music, all I can think is how I walked all afternoon in the Prater in cold rain looking keenly for someone I couldn't name couldn’t recognize even if that person had sauntered by indifferent to the wetting we were getting, maybe that acceptance would have made me know that this was the one, all I can think about is how many places I have walked how many cities how many rains,
all I can think about is how far everything this, all I can think about is you.

12 March 2013
Whistle at the door
wave humbling up
this pebble shore
bladderwrack snags
missionary feet

crash of canoa on wet sand o lift this war
on a plain man’s back all the way to the foot of the cross—a day is wind and danger.

Who is the god
worshipped in this body?

Who comes to call daring to speak another language?

13 March 2013
A DAY

This day also I greet you is one whole year.
This morning
is an obligation.
Remember in the Hadith Muhammad is said
to have found his uncle reading the Bible—
I brought you he said a whole new law all white and fresh and clean why bother with the old stuff the halfway-here?
So it is with the day.
There was nothing at all before this hour.
Put on cinnabar to please the glimpse you get of god.
And that perfume matches your new eyes.

13 March 2013
Time to refill the clock.
Imagine if the whole world ran like me. The sun would run out of silences.
I would have long ago
misplaced the moon, you have to look for it
find it in some pocket by its own silver light like yours, confusing me.
The wind would be asleep.
Or drunk or raving poetry.
Opaque language.
Boiling oceans. Every mouth a different language, a thousand cases of each noun and no verbs at all.

13 March 2013
BHAGAVAD GITA

They call it the song of god. It is small black as a horsefly landed calmly on a linen curtain.

The Song of God
or blessed Gita or gatha or gather rosebuds out of the sky, a bird of a book small as a saint’s ego, small as sunshine slipping through a crack in your windowshade, weak as a rainbow glorious as a tugboat crushing north through ice up our frozen river a week before this book came into my hands.

Our water, the song of god is made of water, of skin, out of the curves in our simple geometry, lined notebooks,
paperclips crayons,
hair in your eyes.
The song of god
keeps you from seeing keeps me from reaching out at the arroyo
to catch hold of some lost sheep, nothing there, oily fleece, lanolin
all over my hands, song of god, what would happen if I touched a song
with oily hands,
rubbed my hands
all over the music
to make it ours,
all over god
to make him us?
O the strange geometries
of our adoration,
houses we build in the sky and go to if we die
who can deny?
A little book
beyond the self
someone lends to me
and someone in me
reads, someone
in me understands,
someone remembers
from all the times
that came before,
the lives, all the gods whose singing sang
you into existence
and me too, to witness
with the dark
eyes of music what one said to another
on the brink of war
even if one of them
is a god or a woman,
even if it is someone
we know, listen
someone at the door
opening the leaves
the book breaks open with a sound like someone becoming you.

13 March 2013
(A FOOTNOTE TO)

The Song of God

so dangerous

close these words,

vague but fanged—

the scariest is of,

I’m not sure about the close that pretends to be so sure of itself, but I don’t believe at all in of.

The only word I really believe in is song.

13 March 2013