All the times you think you’re going to die and you don’t then one comes and you do—think of the difference in how it feels if you can.
We live in foreknowing like mist on the sea.

INFERENCES

So a hymn is a song given to her—

natural enough
groom for the bride.

All of us brothers and sisters are her one single man.

So a hymn to the sun seeks out as sun does the veiled precincts of desire (the emotion that separates me from myself) (because desire is distance and penury and loss) (because everything is over there and I am here)
(if I am anywhere)
al I know is the sun is.
I feel she wants me—
I sleep in that waking.

I’m still buzzing around the bush like a hummingbird in a windstorm there, there’s a simile, aren’t you tired of me yet, coaxing myth to mean?
All the stories end in her lap, it is not such a long road from start to finish, uphill both ways, wind always in your face, the newspaper under your arm, always three days old.

Because Easter is not easy, the raft will reach the sea, the tower topple.
A few teeth left in the dragon’s mouth, some clean green silk around the elf-queen’s waist.
Nothing is lost and nothing is here, the sparrows are fed up with you, your sedentary life, your long walks at sunset, your island cruises.
Why can’t you go where you are?
Farnear. Nearfar. My ancestors came here in a coracle, coarse men who dreamt about horses, I sometimes see them stumbling up the shore.

Endless arrivals.
Christians at the windowsill peering into my zenana, why do they hate pleasure so?
Or when did only things become a pleasure?
I want only what you give me you, who just this minute woke and said good morning in another language, the one only you can speak.

On Nashawena
red cattle
stand in the surf

Poseidon’s gifts looking for their Pasiphae.

No snake without its Eden.

And there were some shadows walking in the clouds I knew by name

exhausted between the sexes blackbird on the rail
the captain sleeping

iceberg shoved against the heart
the captain sleeping
the rose untethered from its thorns sun sleeping on the sea exhausted after watching us the captain weeping

the clouds in wet clothes the shadows come
I have seen you before going to wind shadows walking fast now between the seeing and something seen I know your names you are between I thought at first you were a woman or a man

iceberg in a book
rail on a deck blackbird on a rail

full disclosure the clouds take off their clothes captain weeping in his sleeping his eyes are dry

heart is a habit.

For years I’ve been trying to jump
over my shadow
someday I’ll do it

then at last the shadow will stand up and speak.

The new one the need that knows me deeper and you swanfar in the light lagoon not even memory is hard so far could count those steps.

We let it happen
but I let it happen to me and you were free as silence can be your body looked the other way.

TEETH OF THE FLOWERS

I reasoned in dream

not only roses but what was happening to the big blue campanula beneath our bedroom window, do flowers talk?
If they have teeth they have mouths and if they have mouths they speak, so here comes the one-word gospel again listen.

The night was short,
I almost woke and thought I said something that ended with live in the peace of doubt me and that seemed true enough to sleep on.
And then it was dawn. Alba.
The Gaelic word for Scotland.
I lay beside my Scottish wife and thought how short the nights in June how loud the flowers.

2.
But the teeth of them windflower leopard’s bane on my shoulder I should have left the window open here clear everything language, no hurt to inscribe
what are we at all but things that feel and have to do something with each sensation.
Our beast task
and moral work, what we’re here for (are we here?),
to process feeling
into knowing.

Everything has a mouth
not just the flowers.

3.
I could have thought all that anywhere why here? And where is here in what I thought? Where is the headland of Nashawena and the quiet Sound, gloss of easy water morning and these specific clouds?

Yesterday you filmed close-up of clouds, the pale tattered raiment of the light it said of itself,

it felt almost wrong to see them that way, close, too intimate, too known.

And what do I know now?

This is too loose, diffuse, where is the drumbeat that forces the issue, makes the bear dance?

Work the feeling till it shows another thing beside itself.

I dreamt Masha stood behind me and put her hands over my eyes in the liturgy of Guess Who I knew but never did, you need more to guess with than a woman’s hands, I wasn’t wearing glasses, couldn’t see what I felt and now the sun breaks through the cloud to prove it.
Oh how simple
human mathematics,
a little world, where things have proofs.

BALI

The bolt shoved tight.
Insertion magic.
Stick a sun deep in the sky watch a feather fall from someone passing over.
Our tribe is growing—
too many for one desert.
We need an island
far away or that’s what anybody needs.
Dragon weather.
You wake up and are a mother no longer. Now you are with me.
Now you are me.

SHOALS

Scatter my heart unpersoned hard till I was,

then shattered
onto sea as if I landed

everywhere discontinuous
hence finally free.

12 June 2012, Cuttyhunk Wind tugs at the umbrella tugs at the table tugs at my hand holding the pen tugs a new word out that I have to read about wind and sails and mild buffeting and crops growing two hundred miles inland never a thought of the sea.
