Wanted to write something beautiful to match the woman I proposed to (no matter what she says) twenty years ago as the clock runs.
But I'm all gears and ratchets and no grease, I aim to thunder but I squeak. Listen anyhow to my Cappadocian bagpipe music my north of Amiens shadow-play with real pigeons shitting on the lawn.
I am so much less than you make me want to be for you. But even the words are wrong.

The deck needs us, a glowing absence in each Adirondack chair, a brute named history. The wall falls, the graffiti linger, when you scream something on a space it stays in the air ever after. I too have heard Bach playing at the Thomaskirche.
Yellow flowers on the sachsenpaltz.
I too was a man on earth the dream that made me never stopped. I linger too, the noisy part of you.

Careful the chariot slung low on its carriage bronze horses tug it across the mantelpiece, think of its wobble wheels.

The child Apollo plays at his mother's house. The oblong sunlights shown across the floor, lapping of the pool outside, where the world actually is.

thinks about fire.

He pulls off one sock and sees each toe as a small cool flame.

He lies on his back holds his foot in the air straight up, looks at it, the room fills with light.

The child Apollo takes his grandmother's walking stick from its dusty place in the corner walks outside in the blue afternoon, finds two snakes on the lawn plays with them, they twine up the cane, he shakes them off gently and they skim away.

All over the city the sick are healed, Death yawns at his computer, the sun stands still.

The ink was wrong means isn't what he meant the times are wrong his now is then next he begins to talk but about trees they don't listen well at all he turns back to the pen to write what no one reads this is the lost gospel of Jesus

this is your hand right now.

It's about time for springtime or something else. Revolt of the rabbits. A bas le gazon!
Collaboration of the crows.
What time is it?
Half past never and we'll all be sorry skipping rope or claiming sidewalks or there the rabbits are again their own soft world or so you ponder it's been spring for months the boat's leaving already you hear the hoot of it you're here forever partnership of clouds.

THE GAME

Not the winning but the doing the outside of the orange also has its chrestomathy gather me use me as you can orange rolled along the curve of the spine half an orange nailed to the pine tree the hummingbirds come and drink plunging slim beaks deep in each segment orange is a foreign language a game we play with our tongues orange is a nightingale at noon landing on the small of your back.

Things could choose to go on.

A mood for miracles.

The light not moving it just gets more.

I wonder who lives in my body now and feeds my long bones clamshells and bananas but how does it know when to be or does everyone

know everything but me or do I know it too and do it well enough my mind on something else and the day comes anyhow on?

Things come and go.
Skill lingers, luck changes. Hone how you are, and wait.

Sometimes the sea says nothing.
That's when the mystery begins, being allowed to be a man or woman on the shore looking out to sea looking at nothing at all.
That is the best time when no object obtrudes on the senses and the sea softens your habit of seeing.

Who though is that person on the shore far out, walking on the big rocks down to the pebble part of the beach, who?
I followed a shape as well as I can it is some stranger
I have always known.

3.

More than two hundred years first factory first machines. Not long as glaciers tell it.

On the rock above Lacoste some recent graffiti older than that.

Carved in, to make the moment last. A name.

The same stranger.

Your name.

Plant wheat among the roses said Solomon, plant your waterbrooks with carpweed, your fountains should be bright with copper your bedchambers smell of oil.
But what oils are they that wisdom doth require?
Here in my book is the answer, I leave it firmly shut on your night table—dream anything you need to know.

Will the new word work.

Does he speak.

Now the door is nearby the empty field repeats what you told it—onions barley kale.

Shape of the star the ones we see have six or five rays coming out of them depending on what we believe.

Will the quiet wonder who away from sea —or away from me—understood so well the local ordinance it will be hot today?
Who is in charge where no one lives?
To be born again inside you he cried but it was afterlode heat shimmer on the mind still fogged with sleep —woke and was afraid, simply, they live by scaring us.
As if a pencil has in it already all the words I think I'm writing all the numbers I can count—it tells me what to do.
We wouldn't be here, she said, if we weren't victims of some process.
Women don't think like that, I said but she did and said again We are the outcomes of everything, meager as you are.
Put up a parasol

if you can't stand the sun nothing more to do shape you in wool as if you a sheep were when the cold comes out of history and appalls you with its merciless details.
Trust the language to say what you never could.
You never should.

Don't read the forecast don't play your tennis without a lot of money, wise men do what fools would never dare name the nature of the metal plate your answers with makes your guesswork shine.
Arrogance of smart men without intellect.

From a tower or angle over the empty avenue colors can be measured fresh as they fall from the sky.

At first she felt they were birds then took one in her hand and it dissolved into images—she saw her father's face for the first time in twenty years she saw her brother's hand raised to slap her, a rose a boy gave her once she forgot his face, recalled only the stupid rose even now in her hand she couldn't find his face she smeared all the images on her other hand then both hands found paper and the paper showed for all her life and lines to come the taste of that kid's shy kiss.

The mind fastens on things to fear, the weather if nothing better to keep the body in a natural world where birds tremble as they feed.
