Silver handle head of a rabbit heart in my mouth the beauty in the description deeper than the thing described—glory of lean lines seeking through emptiness the mystery of form, form is edge
of what is not,
form is shape in emptiness a knife floating in the air.
Paper air. Heart in the mouth to see the leap of line out of nowhere and something suddenly is. In line
it all begins—easy enough to say but tears in the eyes.

And what is a person’s shape against the light, what is ours against a wall a door an opening into the dark we stand full of light before, casting the interminable shadow of identity, make the dark darker until we feel.
In some primeval gamble heaven lost its colors to earth now it has true but we have blue and so our mystic arts compel us back to white and black again, feherfekete they say where the Duna runs past on its way to the small dark sea.
She takes about an hour to lay out all the lines and with slivers of black creates the light we see.

Close to the mortal thread an eye rehearses same same same this tree is me as good as you as any child knows how to tell—the cruel things that children do to cats frogs or one another come from former lives, this puss a vagrant spouse, this poor fly a harsh employer. Now champagne and every day is New Years Eve Saint Sylvester waltzing through the trees and there we are again, crowded round with predictable imagery, the flying clock, the shoe on fire.

2.
I said it was matter I claimed we live in a material world blondes and Baskerville Catulluses and turn of the century rowing machines and pardon me was that Swedish you were speaking and a glass of milk.
People people so many people.
3.
Big deal you said there’s nothing but matter anywhere why make a fuss about what isn’t here?
Maybe I’ve heard enough music maybe I want something more no vibrations no hertz no rays into a solitary rapturous silence somewhere in the mind’s mezzanine the escalators have stopped working I’m as clumsy as a man could be and still be here so many years later.
And in Jalisco a nine-year old gave birth.

After the capsized rowboat ferry lost at sea the bird repeating my name at twilight on what I thought an empty beach after midnight and at the height of the blizzard she heard geese crying overhead or maybe it was just one goose she added alone in the storm the way we all are in a way elemental energies recur in the newborn caesarean and every cry says you are my storm but here I am.

Quietly the crows assemble then they speak.
The sky to the north is blue—won’t that be enough for you? Does the sun have to start to speak? Zero this morning no joggers, on days like this they pray to the Road God from home. Last day of the lunar year. The dark is calling.
No one moving outside, no sounds in the house. Language is hopeless solitude.

I’ve thought about it all weekend and what I want you to do is draw me a picture of air.

Missing on the way to work a reason for working. Found on the road home a meaning for moving. In between live by dumb faith. Like a dog or a boulder the glacier left some mornings warm in sun.

KUMI

Casting a piece of the night the sprue of dream to let the lost wax out I make no secret of it but the secret’s there—we live by hiddenness as seeds below the earth biding the slow uprising

Kumi! he said, Stand up.
Jesus says it to the dead girl, Celan stays it to the Jews to himself to be a man in all the senses the flower of sex just one of many stand up and be a hard man on the earth never mind the hidden seeds a seed takes care of itself

“rhymes with pardon” says LZ and yet it doesn’t, not to the ear at least,
that blessed portal, vulva of the heart.

Kumi, stand up and not be dead be definite, fight at my side, συμμαχος εσσω she said to Herself and the heart stood still.

I want to wake to know enough to matter where is my wooden pen what is the matter what can’t I find two hours till dawn

and Saint Love stands shy on the roofbeam

it is a foreign city a river easting through it forests around it, wolves infrequent, lions nil, but the ones with souls keep their distance from the lights the telltale radiance, the city, the true.

They are children only in the land of the lost where all the missing socks and fountain pens and dead mothers live.

Love perches on dark houses safe among the lighted streets and love knows how to hear from far away —sometimes the further the better.

Soft cries come from that forest it is home to what happens—my handwriting is clearer there and I am a better child.

I could be a cousin to it redhead maple or the young deer mooching behind the supermarket —the essence of happiness is to feel related to everything you see—don’t try to grab it, it’s all yours anyhow—just let it be.

10/11 February 2013
And if it’s the end of anything think about the night, every day it has to end but comes back dark as before cycles protect us from identity—everything exists for the sake of everything else—know that and live on the outskirts of truth.

Not much time left to recite the Torah portion of the passing minute, there is a string looped around the words—inside their holy circle you can say anything, the words free you from what you mean into the beautiful silence they forgot.

Travelacious salabond, alors, mon fils, le sommeileur approche though it’s already morning and your eyes are bright

Remember new words are golden carp in monkish ponds every glint a goddess gleaming in the busy mind.

So slow. Turbagid.
Lulliprant. Pronessary.

He’s like the sandman and in the shallow dark he sows your sleep.

Ice and freezing rain the slow cars the slow temperature rises maybe by noon
it will really be today.

Long sleeve sweater
Apollo weather

We knew what we were in for when we came here victims of our imagination of how the place would be, we live in the permanent aftershock of getting what we want.

Arise! I said to the thermometer Unchill the glaze that keeps us in the mirror

I want to be out in the way things are not trying to mind them all in here alone.

Careful steps
on icy roads why does it all feel like remembering?

Open valve lets the world in

We call it senses and say we have them five or six or more depending who stands in the doorway counting who lets the image live the mind isn’t there a bishop of these things who sits on a chair and decides?

But in this town the mind is boss—buy the mind and you’ve got it made.

The Pope abdicating—it comes once or twice in a thousand years.
And here it speaks.
Such a crown to take off a poor old man’s head.
But the white bird will sing again, this time a different tone, a tune he’ll have to teach the man to sing, a song to bring them to the quiet table, the new old song of bread.

Girl on U-Bahn
in Hungarian hat smiles at camera.
The image crosses seas dryfoot as Moses and wakes us
in winter, pearly mist, mist thick as music
all down the river.
It is New Years Day
in another calendar.
We go to our Hungarian friend, we speak in Desperanto, trying hard not to make sense.
