Don't show him the face of his doom he'll see it soon enough leering from his mirror

There are pilgrims everywhere around him no nimbleness left in him in the system. The future has iron hands.

Winning enemies by tenderness—the road is lined with them jeering your limping progress home, Gallia never divided, the sungod never worshipped, both armies slept together in the oak groves.
You really know nothing of the world, you thought feeling was enough, and thinking. But the streets empty as you approach the city.
Only a few millennia have passed, things don't change that much and I feel sorry for myself too.

Caught in slipstream

a word flies loose

anybody can understand the sun but who is she?

The gender-neutral universe of stone.

Catching the eye of time and ordering more—

Omar told us already this is a tavern on the way, why bother with anything that does not need to be done?

All need is now. All you ever need is now.

The dog bites empty air, maybe its master comes home.

. . . doch früh verwaist

But I was so late become an orphan

so late to gloom among the radically homeless the harp strings snap trail over the floor

I remember how my mother loved her baby brother Uncle Harry.

1.

There's a kind of bee that does it, a blue whirring by your ear and two furlongs aft a cleft of honey.

First be reminded.

Think of that word and maybe it happens.

The bees of winter need your now.

2.

Count on the fingers of your heart the times you failed her and multiply by the times you failed yourself.

The times tables we learned as children last your whole life.

Only at the end discover one times zero equals me.

3.

Dry portion left. From soup or chowder a sea-y thing all salt and whiskers Drink what your language made for you—nourishing,peculiar. People look at you on the street. Ça va, you look at them too. Sun today and gone tomorrow. The night is her daughter and changes your mind.
The ancients called all this a dance.

But there has to be a place to do it.
Open up the old barn, sweep the chicken coop, fence out the corral. Rodeo time and not a horse in sight. You have to be stallion and mare all by yourself, the haughty gaucho and the visiting bishop.
Silence on the streets. Any given circle is every circle. Its center is right here.
Its circumference holds everywhere.

Write fast—noon hurries towards you from the crack of dawn. Think slow to catch the shadows left from night.
Every second is a needle in the flesh pointing always away. Every second is an intersection that pierces you.
In this kind of city there is no now.

A hard morning anthem a bridge, I am a bridge the kind that swivels on its pivot to let a lofty vessel pass all normal traffic on the roadway has to wait its turn while this great business goes by.
Be late to church by all means, leave your boyfriend marooned at the mall.

Day 6 I'x—Jaguar

Pray to the world for the world pray to the ground for a field light a candle and set it in the snow let the earth know you're here.

A flame always gives thanks.

Way out back the mill of reason grinds noisy gears. A grain of sense slips out. Plant it deep. Wait for spring.

Lent starts today. Ash is remember.

But would it be something else if it could is the question the stoic asks of everything because such questions fit the mouth easily as thunderweather walks the mountain then it is time for all the golden cars to zoom down sunrays like the Aryan gods they thought themselves because of wheels nothing ever had to be invented it was there, principle of conservation of energy, called a law and misunderstood and why not, every law deserves a criminal an outlaw as we said in the north country every man's hand against him, a torch burning in winter rain, a king dead on the sand.

an die Sonne

She doesn't mean to do it just shines and lights the way or the stay. We choose our stillness though her speed.

The warmth of her. The flowers know her. On all of us.
And night is her only dream.

for Charlotte, at Valentine

Joy of the thing is to bring it all back to you

where it began,
the land
of love is underfoot

wherever you stand, being with you
is the first time

I've fully been.

ON VALENTINES

One love sonnet more or less wont damage the tradition or hurt the roses and the hearts—it'll go almost unnoticed into the permanent archive carved round the globe high beyond the weather, the logosphere itself.

Still room up there for all we say and all we said to be inscribed—maybe one day the sphere will be complete, and all the words fuse in a fury of love and purest saying, a diamond world around new heaven.

for Charlotte

Unaccountably he smiled at the sun.
Rarity! He must think the illusion is shivering at last, a see-through world all round him! Are we only footnotes to the light?
Just turn the page and see.

BEADS

A round of beads each bead a word
each bead a world
no, each bead
a solar system, no,
a galaxy, no, each bead one universe
after universe
slips through fingers, each bead the whole of being, each bead
reality itself, no,
each bead a breath,
each breath a prayer that being be and be now.

Being on the other side again here's the light and here am I like a busy chessboard but the players are dead we pieces have to move ourselves we know the squares we stand on but we don't know the rules, we move like moonlight on the cornfields as the clouds come close us in or let us move through our lives.

I ama stretch of moonlight on an empty highway

for a moment I help you find your way.

PUNCTUATION

Every sentence ends with it.

I wish there were a sign that means Begin.

15.II.13

1.

The open door knows me the girl stands in her own shadow the west is full of light already the clock I live is heavy in my pocket the man remembers how close he is.

2.

How close things are.
Is it enough to remember.
Vulture: emblem of motherhood self-sacrifice economy.
Most birds are green to begin with.
We know what we mean by colors but who else knows?

3.

Berlin not too long ago I saw a street someone else only remembers,
What is the difference between here and then?

4.

It has to pause, to wait while the sudden sun unspeaks the snow

slush melts, at last we walk on water.

To be here again

on the other side of hydrogen.

Azoth, the air itself is alchemist enough.
