SHALE

If any body here?

The sun is too big for the sky root of my mouth

these sings I bring tree harping for more.

There are ever.

And because a dust

a rhythm absolute smell of a friend's hand even if married

What is the root of what you say is it you or is it another —this is the only question, all the rest is politics

Right about now.

The pain of windows always to be seen through seldom seen—

o bless the dust that settles on the glass.

Because it will lead if you let it spread out from what you thought then follow it to when even dim stars cast a shadow so dark there is,

desert of clean air when the night is fat and you own the whole of it by purest listening.

Or is it too close to the end to start beginning now?

Words of different sizes occupy the same mind where is the critic when she takes off her prose?

is there space for the leaper in this dull ambulance?

can we squeeze another end to let milk tragedy unfold?

Compose a we that you'd belong to I never could?

Questions are amalgams that don't actually fill the cavities.
It just hurts a little less to ask—sunbreak over doomed cities can't even understand the question let alone the pictures in a child's book a small decent kind of God would live in you and make you kiss your neighbors but Existenz always wants authority

I bind your wheat you led me to the doorway is glittering with pearl eternal mistletoe of the affrighted rose!

fray our way through the undergrowth

Übermaß !

the bucket leaks but still is overfull space station cosmologies gross stars over laugh track shatter desert midnights (the only sin is wanting you when you is someone special, the only sin is wanting anyone but you)

any real you is someone else is far away if I had less to say I might begin

but as it is it is.

Can one fall in love with a philtrum or tone of voice in how someone says No?

is the insignificant the only thing that signifies?

no matter how big the candle is the flame is only the size of itself.

Answer me, Lady Poverty, if the blue sky is your only robe may I yank it from you?
And then what would I see?

MAKE ME
(IN)VISIBLE

I wrote this in shellac on the side of the rain it stayed there after the weather went away

I love the way

Everything lasts.

To be simple to be simple again to be a leaf again in God's garden

the way a child is intent on nothing
intent on nothing
but what comes next.

Walls of packed snow three thousand feet caught in a vee cracked sapphire over Himalaya
but from this trumpet cry the walls rise up granite breaking the sky.

Take me
wherever your breath goes

I will follow, I have to there is nowhere to stand but what I hear.

DIES IRÆ

No longer used as Sequence in the Catholic Mass of the Dead.

When we lose the tonus, the tune, we lose the words too—often the words are only along for the ride ecven though they may in the first place have made the car go and shaped the way we feel as we travel.

SOFT MIRROR

How far from your body your words run and if I only read them what would I know about what it feels like to stand in a room with you in light or dark. No trees outside, no mist purling through the woods, no old shack an ancient yeoman built. You describe no one but yourself, and yourself is the one you can't see.

You need a soft mirror, one that lets you in.
It shows the truth of your body and your face but it lets you climb into what you see and be reborn as the actual being you see and leave outside the glass, here in the trash, everything you thought you knew before you looked into the soft mirror and became.

13-AJ

On the day Thirteen-Reed it is best to stay home it is a day to inhabit one's own body wherever it may stand.

Move. It is the place where one is always at home.

The thirteen vowels of the divine name resonate like wind in the reeds high and low and in between and mostly in you. In me.

Because the body is the only one that understands.

Explores. Maintains the Industrial Revolution of the spirit that makes me. You.

Because the body is the fallow field left over inherited from the ancestors (your former lives) and now for this brief afternoon of the senses the body is all mind

This body is history.

Your future lives resound quiet, quiet in it like the sound from a piano when there's no one in the room and no one playing.

Today I felt snow on my skin.
Where have you been all my life?
You have been a blond girl in Peru holding European flowers in your lap while you read a Chinese book.
You have been a cunning connoisseur silver reliquaries and gilt pyxes passed through your soft hands and great gold framed triptychs spread their wings across your greedy walls.
And you leave it to me to describe every mortal shape or color in them, the lamb unslain, the bleeding Isaac, Judith wiping her sword on her skirt, the Holy Spirit resting bird-wise on a maiden'd breast, prophesying with its murmurs the ultimate revolution when Matter throws open its gates and there is no more difference!
And all this is told by the colors alone I have to name and quantify and choose which ones to paint your eyes with topaz, blue-eyed greeny, my olive grove?

VOICES FROM THE GROUND

But there were no words there only the Summoner crept out from the crack between the seasons told me Your skin will soon be healed of all its absences the sun will remember the ones you thought you loved all the information you have stored there and you will see them there every morning as it rises whether you see it or not.

But why are you telling me this? because despair is deep and only when Baubo lifts her skirt do you live again, the grief cracks open,
and feelings lose their grip on you,

Tell me again the part where the sun comes out and the park in Lower Saxony fills up with light and maidens parade down the mile-long allee under chestnut trees, despair

in all that green and the filmy dresses and far-off looks is that the normal condition of the heart, a sleep of hope,

broken marble staircase to the ruined castle have to spend so many nights in till we wake at last to find that she has gone, that they have gone, all those we hoped to build our lives around and we have nothing but ourselves, nothing but myself to hold me up as I try to climb from the rotting bedsheets, leaves and moss, moss and leaves that's all your love ever leaves it screams inside me but is it me?

I see the staircase where she sat reading a small book the pages as she turned them often glinted as they caught the sun she was close to the end of the book I hoped she would stay there reading or remembering I stood in trees in shadow where she could just see me if she looked up she never did, even when she closed the book she looked still at her lap where the book had lived then she got up and swept up the stairs but left a presence of some sort behind as if where she'd been sitting changed the stone or what she had been reading changed the air.

One more night that I won't have alone.

Deep in the forest there is a well I know ancient bluestone coping round it I often camped there in an autumn season trying to hold onto summer the way men do as if time could not be trusted as it passes and it would trick us with sly acceleration and the well would be frozen one day when I came to drink and I would find no water, and could not see what face I was wearing this day, and who I was, and what would heal me now and no far blue light deep underwater could I see. that tells me if I'm the right track at last.

I need your body to be real

the ambiguity torments me

are you or is there anyone really there

it's only real when you let it when you let me this is love's agony, the doubt of why this and only this body suffices

to focus the energy of existence among all the scattered pain of consciousness and nobody knows and nobody ever will the need's real name but now this name, do it,

be it to me.

From some much of me the airship floats silent over Nowhere-on-Dream and the dark forest is thronged with curious maidens baroquely naked and all the nightingales industrious. Beauty.
All the hard things cling together.
Tighten your wide leather belt, your eyes twinkle in dreamlight. No one is here but me. King Leviathan reaches into his mouth and pulls people out—this is called mythology, our politics.
A flute sonata by Boismortier is heard a man who has or lives in a dead forest.
I believe everything I say. A reason for everything but none that I know.
This is Arcadia, or forgetting, or letting the stone take on the warmth of flesh until we are the same as where we are.
