I can busy myself beside a small lantern.

—Bethany Ides

But compassion is an open wound the Lama said. the bacteria of otherness get into your system, you care about something out there.
Fruit, something to eat, a woman or a man. The otherness gets in and you start to care. You care for more and more until until you fit the world the way a cheek fits an open hand.

Palm of a hand on a cool cheek.
You feel. You want to see what you feel. It is there.

Maybe it is there. You care for there. You light the lantern it is hard, you need matches one after the other until it goes. The flame comes.
You smell the hot tin, green tin with glass faces, four sides of light, you see whatever is there. It touches you, say, a hand on your cheek.

The pieces of an experience fit together neatly. That exactly is how it happens.
Everything. Your cheek. The hand.

STEPS (8)

No picture of tells true

but pictures do

it’s hard to start without an element

stepladder from the heart to a ceiling fixture that gives light

light makes sound

from it all depends

I give you steps
 Stufen
I give your steps Stiege monumental outdoors and true as stone can be a fountain in it slippery in winter but cool in summer

sit on what I give you give you what is yours

climb

once we had chariots miracles of horse design there were no boundaries then the glass was full but none would drink from it until your mothers came in virgin latitudes beyond a bird

we were white with miller’s dust brown with his bran we were red with beast blood yellow with autumn

before we came there were no colors here we gave the blush of scarlet to the rose and turned the sky blue with some of our eyes on the way

on the way to you the voices were of before us their mandolins in heaven their couches deep-cushioned in sateen whereon they sprawl to dine on us they still let us listen but try to be now try to tell what a girl needs to know to keep herself safe from my insinuations from her ‘own’ mediated desires teach what is actual to the mindstream of the self not what is implanted by society is there? is there really?

the influences of corporeal bodies upon us

mass

can she ever even?
can this one tell?

the steps are cold in winter but still sit down a minute a human body’s warm enough to heat the world.

It is always asking each and every you—look up the words one at a time be a child of any text never more complicated than the next word what is life without perverse desires that is desires that are just your own that’s where linguistic speculations should take you to take the clothing off your alphabets and be the body only you can be.

When I come to visit you I won’t wear a hat

I need to scream to you scream at you just hear the sound of my voice the sound of my body without all the fucking words just hear me when I come into your house all the windows break all the doors fly open the lights go out and everything is very quiet till I scream and nothing will happen till you hear me.

Caught out by meek snow the day dulled a little bluejayed hedges thick—not for nothing are they called yews

Some seem forever but falter between one dream and the next by snow-melt gospel

such stuff the sun preaches all the sad ladies on slippery pews the thrones of time

we also wake from nothing sure but nothing missing either so the seeming ending somehow fits the seeming start.

Those Europe towns with sidewalks few and housedoors open right on the cars go by too fast
from the time streets had only to be wide enough for thee and me.

Walking the dog without a dog took so many years to get here across the street and up to meet the old road coming down

And now are trees at least the bird talkers
the upright friends some danger they are the sirens
I keep repeating whatever they tell me.

Meek new pastoral with no shepherdesses or even shepherds only the shadows of big birds—hawks, harriers—float across the rocks the lonely love leads me here.

People who live among trees all their lives don’t see them. Don’t listen.
But you, an exile from the grey machine, delight in their different samenesses.
You try to listen wind in your ears who knows whom you hear, just grammar talking in your underwear.

NYQUIL

Woke from peaceful sleep my coughs all night suppressed were waiting for me all at once fierce as sunrise I choked on metaphors, calmed, calm, the lawn stifled in sunlight, cold. Cold.

So many plans
for one young mind.
Engraving. The grave,
the doors, the garden shed,
the lost republic,
the names Atlanteans gave their ships.
Look at me even now—how would you know where I have ever been?
I don’t fill out questionnaires.
I have stopped reading Greek.
They still get more beautiful as the sun starts to go down.

I need density back give me thick-lipped Muse this is too easy I rush myself into fever to be clear to tell all the news to all the yous who don’t want to hear how hard a tree is how big a horse is.
Give me hard words again to talk about soft things and we’ll all live through the all too understanding night.

The imagination is also a child playing with its things. With things.
Sometimes the names you learn come before their things. Wild excitement when you first can fit a name you heard to some thing you just met. This must be a calla lily. This must be a frog.

Dear Kate
of course
old enough to feel younger because my armor
falls away
I know a little and know a little better who I am so there’s a little bit less fear that makes me\ pliable again at risk of feelings never stop feeling and now I’m less judgmental maybe a little infantile I feel vaguely 17
with everything still to do.

I forget all the books I’ve written, all the wives, places, planes, seas, violins, city dawns and country midnights, forget it all and it’s all new, all waiting to be done.
Or else like this:

I’ve amassed all my material—now it’s time to get to work. I have to say everything I can say because if I don’t say it, who will? It won’t get said—then where will we be? Where will you be if you don’t hear everything only I can say? We owe each other. And where will I be if you don’t say everything, everything, only you can say?
Each person a unique instrument, a pioneer loaded with information about the unknown country we’re still children in, every word counts, we’re building the world mind by saying our own.
Tell me tell me tell me tell me.

Each day I revise my conception of what a poem is so what I’ve written that morning can be called a poem something worth giving to you or god or enlightened mind someone who knows it all already but loves seeing our lips move as we speak.

Cusk is a kind in fish cought off the Cape hard to have here who wants to carry all the way anywhere such a thing, a stew gets made from it, a wheel’s not for eating the distances mean something, what is far away

should stay there the size of the body says.
