Refuse to refuse and still turn off the light, bird flies up to the roof seemed white and large dove-big or gull-little.
Fly on the lampshade a speck of night.
All sunlight does is feed the dark.

2.
So it a question of belief of desire spilling images into what we take as the future sticking you with what you want or thought you wanted. And all you ever meant is now.

3.
What I want is the surfaces of things the sayable strokable curtains over the core.
The Veil of the Temple was the truest image of God.

I think I have become the one you mean over the mirror over the door my daughter’s house my oldest violin—delicate ambuscade of the visible birds waiting for me when I wake softish sky

  how did you wake the sky?

Who was your sleep?

5.

Softness of what seems loud waking up with the tone controls of dream. What turns you on turns into you, we all know that. Ayahuasca forests, Your skin is somebody else.
6.
Look for me in the light won’t find me there

no dark either theodicy

all I ever was is in between footfall of a shadow on the steps glass staircase climbing up the air

I am your aspiration subsumed into language.

Now chew these leaves and call it morning.

It is hot in the core of the woods I have no business there what am I doing knowing the meter is all wrong inside we catch the plumb line but have no force no one can climb to where we are the pendulum moves the hand things are too far all I knew was the shape of some legs climbing the simple steps legs moving briskly up the hallway half a hundred years ago everyone is too far the hall my hall the years my years just kiss an image and let it go a photographer on every corner is waiting to caress you of course you want a city possess you with that terrible eye of course a city who else could God be or his angel lost on a street with no name a house with no number only a color but are you sure a number with no square root I will never feel that skin all other is a foreign shore can’t cross over Jordan you are Moses little girl autistic in this sunlight quavering musculature you are allowed to swim most interesting circles in the sacred river but never all the way across across is the other person some idiot like me with outstretched arms weeping in my greedy need for you are drunk on exile and never fail the chalice the secret elixir poured deep in you spoken with someone’s tongue around the cup edge of your ears would never dare the fire of your core.

The names of famous statesmen do not fortify the wine. History dissolves like sugar in water.
Xerez. The meek turn milk as Falstaff prophesied. Green-sick callow artists pledge such temperance.
Tarot trumps and unbelievers.
I did not become a prophet by squeezing your thigh, my hand is a man of its own—in crystal goblets drink these tears the god in heaven leads me to the truth half-asleep and tell no lies—a child is born without the will to want what a lonely smile the whitest teeth she lips a curl of ice cream in her mouth.
White white white. No wonder I cry.

Pale shadow of a single nymph as from Greek arisen from the quarried stone, a miracle of accurate caesura, old word for a little climax of the breath and out she swims into our once natural world, a grace all goblin’d by our quest for name for form need and absolution, believe my body, pale as it is your only answer ever.

Eyes are hummingbirds drink deep and quick from everything they linger on—sick surfeit maybe after.

The messenger we believe tells us what we know already and this is Loki’s day when effect begets its causes “because you punish me I will tell the always truth”

LESS SAID THE BETTER

lees left after the letter a mouth at the back of the taste someone else’s in ture if it were only a day to tell lies count the flowers on the bush go hum a beingbird the mirror runs from the face the runner beats the earth the road assails the runner’s heels if it were only a little more than enough ya vas lyubil I meant you once now you’re so different nothing matters less not a cynic being but a hoper a leaper with his church bell stand there and be a temple open up the prism and let the light back in we were colored once and now are plain crossed Delaware dragging my Indian name August dryshod almost most of a century flew by water I fear water I crave who am I to stand on every river ever known Prabhakirti water I fear to drink widen the doorway I need to forget burlap socks casual news it’s more like hiding behind the yew tree but everything that grows grows there for you I touched the rain with such tender care she made her body her pet and took it with her everywhere I have a new name now want to see wearing the shabby clothing of the confident waiting to spend everything that spills seeding the lawn with everlasting shadow.

Last night’s fox feeding on parathas scented with fenugreek
dear ruddy friend
all that folklore in our little woods how the books all finally come home to the world of things and are things beasts alert
to our presences worth it for the food—how we are fed by what we feed fed by what we see.

Are we after liquid disaster
the rhyme words boogie old fashioned in the head
—more hip than hop—
it’s where the eye lands leads the hand—

grab after sequences of dust encomium moriæ for because we’re fools we can be saved cheated into paradise by a talking dove a block beyond Descartes—see that church?
ancestor built it
see that tree?
ancestor planted it
see that God?
ancestor dreamed Him up—and when he was a river I was a hero I went down there to eat with him in his clamshell dining room his wife in coral underwear dreamed on the pearl settee—the soup was thin but filled the mind the meat was a condensation of aged atmosphere condensed so you could taste inside it all the famous people who had breathed it in and out before he mashed those molecules down for dinner—Sappho, Achilles, Parsifal, all the tuneful fools of love in heaven every one of them waiting to be born again to hurry home and rescue us.
And for our dessert it was enough to dream the same dreams she was in as she lay beside us.

Was I even thinking poor bad-teeth checkout woman checking out organic rack of lamb.
What is there in the sky?

So many hummingbirds the sun makes me sleepy turn me around to face the clever dark.

21.VII.12
Willful like the rows of corn scattered shadows of maple leaves the wind alone is what I mean.

Just enough blue to say the usual the ferry to the island the day’s work already working in your spine your mind the agents of otherness assembled to abstract your poor

quintessence the daily hostage drama
unfolds inside your actual soul

if I can get away using such a word dusty as it is the rafters of the mind.

22 July 2012
The color of it shifts from dawn to light a relatively small vocabulary is enough to describe the course of a man’s whole life but not enough to distinguish precisely one rose from another growing on the same bush.
Language must mean the other.
