There’s always someone to listen to.
I’m not claiming someone is always talking but you never know. I do know

Silence if you can or will my acoustic spasm. The sun on the ice-sheathed morning branches speaks French.

29 January 2009
No matter what you’ve been up to the stars still shine.
Ice melts under warm rain.
The truth is out:
all there is is all there is.

ANGST

Someone angry speaking heart of blame.
Or is it the coffee pot making its sound _à toute chose son histoire_ of which we are a little part.

Or was it, I thought, a rat in the wall—one winter they came into all these houses—no, coffee, and soon like an easy epigram in the Greek Anthology I’ll go and drink what I hear and call it day.
First morning on earth.

What we dismiss out of hand falls from the hand and is lost to us.
Have we so many instruments we can let one fall untried?

TRYING TO CATCH UP

with the fluidity of ink rainfall on the border people sitting in the rain will they ever say as much as they mean will they ever mean as much as they are somewhere it is raining—that’s all that’s easy to say.

But something else needs saying—-crack the rock and there I am?

Jesus said: Split the log and I am there. If I can be even in the simplest things I can be in you. Find me.

In a season of wearing hats beginning it is a season of wearing a reason for wearing hats if this were or since this is a baroque oboe concerto I would say again this season of the reason to wear hats again and again a variation on a hat or someone wearing a hat a reason or sneezes would make my hat fall off.

ANIMALS

What do they think when things happen?
What do they know of causes? Are we there for them at all?
Soft rocks are we round which they move their minds like ours on other things?

Kiss my brain
it is the prairie through which you run uncontrolled by wind the grass also knows you

A little open space to lean on my camel tethered to your shadow my overcoat with stars

I’m rich again, the paltry mildewed regulations got eaten by rats, the rats went home, the air is clean of anybody’s intention,
interpretations,

we broke the prison wall and let a bird out,
when everybody else shouts Victory!

does that make me a radical or just one more tramp?
I love how tall you are when you stand up.

for they are purpler than any other strings, purpler instrument a whole note held this poor old world a frail fermata

and then and then what comes next?
purple as shadow on a frozen lake

of course sources differ, some light hums from the sky, soft secret light leaks up out of earth—leaps?
    some say, some so close the way a chair is to another chair around a table

but the table is not there only the space they shape for themselves chair beside chair in purple shadow

the two lights mingle till we say in simplicity there is light or I see light or it is so close to twilight the in-between light that the trees themselves though they have no leaves still breathe,

    they breathe an absence even a something else in January woods, a slim sly duskiness
    or thick,
a thickery of very air, as if the air itself were sitting softly on a chair winter on earth? evening? soon? soon is the song we improvise all this soft of gloaming, to make love in this kind of now would be too obvious, too soon, too spätromantik, love should be always nowadays, created, made with current methods and materials, made love, built up at ten to nine on weekday mornings on the subway between Chambers and 14th when the train hurtles north and everybody is deep asleep in the same dream dream of a work about to begin, and then the true the so-called love could buzz like bees or beeswax among us like Jupiter among his buxom swans, Venus slippery among her anxious paramours and nobody notices! nobody sees! because everybody does it and it is everybody and no one even knows what everybodies do, go slow, love too

is a parapet, a paper crown on a sweating forehead, a comic opera with no birds in it a young deer bolting over last night’s snow frightened maybe but not very fast.

[7 February 2009]

for Adrienne & Marka Elephants shouldn’t ride horses, obvious things are best no one notices, and poetry reads a little fresher when it’s a little shopworn rustles like thrift-shop rayon dresses with big pink flowers.
The river dried up long ago that’s why we’re so sure what the new direction is, a sunbaked scar for miles and miles.

In the ‘50s New York tried hard to be Paris in the ‘20s now New York tries to be New York in the ‘50s nothing’s easier than a new idea and elephants everywhere, les vieux pets of the island of beavers drinking the sad free wine of vernissages and smoking in the doorways of galleries Chelsea what have you done to yourself you used to be so shy and with such pretty hindparts peach trees grew there and only sculptors were ever afraid.

The snow has been here for days but this is the first time the sun has seen it.

So finally I get to see it too and if I follow my shadow backwards

I can finally intuit where I’m coming from.

Lo, I had read the whole book and no word hurt.
