junF2009

Robert Kelly
Bard College

Follow this and additional works at: http://digitalcommons.bard.edu/rk_manuscripts

Recommended Citation
http://digitalcommons.bard.edu/rk_manuscripts/556 No glance cast an armorer safe among his hammers wooden men he shapes his tinware on is me at morning—

nothing to see
except the cast of the day to see the feel of it and turn away.

16 June 2009, Cuttyhunk
I BOW MY HEAD

to the inner engine dragged me from dream we went to see a lady maybe half a mile away, I carried secateurs for her garden she didn’t finally want, she shuddered when she saw it, not scissors at all but a big food chopper you press down hard and it springs up again, you pound it down again and again to mince anybody’s onions.

I still feel the thing dangling from my fingers as I walked, we stepped over a tiny brook that bound her house in,
a little winking stream around what is called her property

16 June 2009
Cuttyhunk
Now that’s over with the dream of having a dream to tell
    and the night
heron still perches by the clam flats dreamless as what happened, as a stone, what really happens.

16 June 2009, Cuttyhunk
There is a pause built into things a measure
    you can hear it some days like a magpie calling on the road to Thebes.

16.VI.09, Cuttyhunk
It’s when you tell me what to do I do.
Painters call it a commission I call it when you say Write me a poem about merry-go-round horses stored all jumbled together in the glassed in sunporch of the old Allen House hotel closed a dozen years now and nowhere to go, Christ, not even one circle left in the whole world.

16 June 2009
Cuttyhunk
Cross it out and pick up the pieces.
Something needs you – cork has to come out of the bottle some blue is leaching into the horizon—things change. Face them as they come.

Reading about death always makes it seem further away.

16 June 2009
Cuttyhunk
How could I say it again if I never said it even once before?
And yet I do, time and again, like a clock whose every tick is startled by its own next tock and every minute is apocalypse.

16 June 2009
Cuttyhunk
Small answers
the kind you might believe even if I say them taking my hands for once off the stars and slice instead a strawberry a fat firm none too tasty one they shlep from Mexico in all seasons

fine for you in honey
and yoghurt and a white bowl with a cobalt

rim around it—
there, now will even you believe me?

17 June 2009, Cuttyhunk
Sometimes you wear glasses—what do you see on other days, the inside of time
looking back at you, more a taste than a shadow, a feel from the eyes that’s not exactly seeing?
Would you  be natural, my daughter, even as the poet pleads? Or would you keep from seeing the look in my eyes, I who am nobody’s father?

17 June 2009

Cutthyhunk
ONZE

I like eleven. Elevenses. Hendecasyllabics of Catullus, of Dante. Eleven line poems of mine or anybody’s. Two figures standing side by side against the horizon, upright, looking away from me. Eleven in the number of the sea, which always stands beside itself. Two fingers holding a cigarette. The Twin Towers like two young men standing side by side, eleven the sign of Sodom, the towers destroyed by homophobic fundamentalists who can’t being next to anyone. Eleven. A pen and a pencil nested in its presentation case offered to a businessman about to retire. Gold and gold. A man looking back on his whole life. You standing next to your shadow on the white wall.

17 June 2009, Cuttyhunk
Find a place where the chairs are at home—that’s what you’re looking for,
and the windows have 20/20 vision and the stars come out all night.

17 June 2009
Cuttyhunk
I can too remember my past lives, all my incarnations—they’re all in the dictionary waiting for me to speak them and remember.

17 June 2009
Cuttyhunk