A SUITE OF PIECES ON CERTAIN MUSIC

All those afters waiting for a single before.

November Woods by Arnold Bax oykh mir an Irisher we all are an exile. Exiled always from the place you stand.

“The woods were green...” and we ran away.
The woods are sere, we still are there, there is a mountain on the other side of the city no one has clomb he said and we wondered how he knew so well what no one did.

The music’s not as strange as these woods are, my house is in there found, and found again, a license to be here and a bird flying ober.

Water the amaryllis, it’s November again and almost gone, the music is too thin, the air is thick in November woods, o I see, he’s listening to the light alone, not to its veils, its intricate apparencies,

between trees
I can name and all the others, a thickening of the light I try to hear.
Warm for the season I have been cold so long.

Does an exaltation have to do with its name or somehow live therein?

So when the Pope looks up in Saint Sophie does he think Justinian?
Anthemius? who built a stone flower a lotus of the lower air open down to us to take us in?

The splendor thick in trees air charged deep weighted with task: remember the light.
I stand in leaf-fall of a hundred years the open secret, the undisturbed potency of what is present to itself completely, hence to me whoever I turn out to be in this music, the arrest. The crest. A river crawling past.

This is the day the dead go on to heaven from where they have been waiting all month long or all year long depending on the intensity of their waiting.

They go to the place where they are going to be dead a long or little time. This is called The Happy Forest, it lasts ten minutes of time but what is time among the orchestra of sheer going on, then they are reborn in their chosen capsules —four kinds of being born—and here they are, again it may be, every one of them (of us I really mean) strolls along, flaneurs of inner cities, smiling at the back of our minds at our memories of this same place.

The from place.

  The happy time (or happy kind) just below the skin you hardly ever get to know these days, cities, chores, mines, oilrigs, the games our lives depend on playing and why not, anything for a laugh, anything that smells even a little bit like love is good, even a little true. Like you (if I may be impertinent) (yes but not personal) here the main theme comes in, far away strings not too high pitched, like the groan of an old apple tree in autumn wind under the weight of everything it means to say.

  Like you that way too, silently articulate.
Close enough to the finish line you can see the deer stand around the meadow, the picnickers folding up their linen, the revolutionaries in old Chevrolets nervously sticking to the speed limit, it’s going to rain. Or it’s not.
We’re nervous too but don’t know about what.

Could it be that this is how it starts?
The ending, I mean, the impertinent impenitent who takes you, even you, by the hand and walks you to the door, coaxing you,

a hand soft on your waist, ever amorous, ever saying goodbye?

Our suspicions are confused. A taste of sunlight on your lip.

It tastes like a flute.
It sounds like a bird hitting the window, falling, getting up, shaking itself, flying away.

IN IRELAND THEY TEACH YOU TO PLOW THE CLOUDS

1.
Teachers teach you to do what they can’t in Ireland though it’s different neither teacher nor learner can.

2.
I want to tell everyone the truth.
But the cloud is only apparent.
Yet it is our breath restored to heaven funny old word for sky. The sky I mean. We give back what we took in. How to plow what only you can see.

3.
Once on a cold day the furnace failed, it started to snow inside my living room little flakes forming at the ceiling and sifting down.

The proportion. The relationship.

Heaven is anywhere.
You are the plow. I mean me, I am the one.

It means too much to me to tell you what I mean.
5.
In jets you get a sensation you are the nose of something big and hard snouting through the clouds.

When the furrow is clear you see the earth down there farms fields factories folk tall the lovely phony actual.

Plowing the clouds is to find earth again.

(sketches from a prompt I gave)
I wonder if Fand in The Garden of Fand means fionn like white or pale, color of barley, color of autumn grasses ornamental, waving beside the dry fountain at Blithewood, ghost-white waftures, breezy mild monsters, dream, dream, color of one time your hair, the hue called fair, it sounds easy, pretty, as pale or bright affairs ease us with their soft glare, o god the light coming through your hair.

Some times (all times) too much for me, the separation, how much you mean, how much you do to the light coming through. It comes mysterious now, the keys of things jingling from the soft belt round her waist, youthful chatelaine of this place, we hear her coming through the woods or up the hall, the keys jangling for all the doors, everything has a door, she knows which one fits each, it is a storm coming out of the west. We always hear too much. It is a kind of run we drink, excessive stimulation of the amygdala, I mean identity, excessive stimulation of desire.

But the keys keep sounding, the doors fly open one by one, soundlessly they close, open, we see the weather hurrying in, on all those leaves, yes, storm.
But it falls away in her hands, she carries out everything she brought in, that is what a garden is: colors, stone walls around something you remember, want to remember,

un colore non dura says Ungaretti, we can almost guess what that must mean, In or out of the garden.

But the beautiful walls!

So mild today, not warm, mild virgin it used to say on cigarettes in Germany, just as on the old Gauloises yellow it used to say \textit{goût Maryland}.
Like Camels sort of but without the implication.

Who is that it who used to say? Who said so much that nobody says now?

So mild today,
time so mild and virgin today, the pale empty trees, their cotillion, nude débutantes,
the light’s début, always this time of year, but so mild today when everything is almost known, kept, thrown away, so mild,

\textbf{Summer Music} Ken sent me waiting for the Hartley train to start, all the stations of my ascent to this particular northeast moment home.
Trumpet call. Brass sounds like glass.

Now who is this Abraham Morris I find among my ancestors, the earliest on earth, father of William, William my great-great-great great grandfather, so mild today, could I be Abraham also?

Have I not like him cried out Hinne-ni to any passing music, here I am Lord, listening, be not enchanted by my listening but flee, may I, soundlings, vague among your proper woods?
