WALK THERE WITH ME

Be assembled by children on Christmas morning following instructions with difficulty in Asian English unfolded from the box on thinnest paper.

There are bisons shuffling on the lawn and a yellow car on its side with men working on the undercoat painting blue skies and golden constellations and a goddess who holds the whole car in her arms and all our roads, safe driving, someone.

How delicate these Roma are with spray paint and old chisels, the rust goes and the sky comes on and we are friends again knee to knee at breakfast, we do what the weather tells us to, we are loyal to our atmosphere, we study a red-bellied woodpecker chafing at the suet, how bright a black bird’s eye is, it’s as if, isn’t it, isn’t it true, it’s the opaque that gives light, we see by darkness,

resistance,
dark holes give light,

we must be getting sleepy if we’re thinking about science, the poor man’s art,
the buyable, the countable, the temporary true, and now grumpiness sets in, my parts don’t work too well, the batteries give fire, fine, it’s just that Slot A will not accommodate Tab B without a little bending and God did not put me here to bend, I am the resistant, god of the sudden dance, an I-beam in the middle of the world, around me, around me, virgins.

Or else the manufacturer mislabeled everything, said in but meant out, forgot a negative, or put an extra in, or else the children didn’t understand, did you, of course the children know how to read, books were made for children, to silence them into language, safe, to lock away their dreams against some imaginary morning when we wake with nothing on our minds. Fat chance.

I JUST WANT TO BE WITH PEOPLE WHERE THEY ARE

With you as is.
No kinds no calendar.
The buffalo have eaten all the grass and shamble on to the property next door, biology is endless the sky falls down every night and nobody’s bothered,

not many notice
but I don’t miss much, I’m still picking darkness off my shirt.

And here comes the sun!
I love the way you wrap it up for me.

ONE DIRECTOR TO ANOTHER

go to Godard and ask him what to do, even though you detest his apartness from the scene and you know he’s a member of the Nazi underground ask him what to do, nobody gives better advice than an enemy listen to the contempt in your own voice and feed it back along the track to you yourself, eye on the prize, go to the rich, the rich savor your contempt but not like the old days now they need a cocktail of derision, desire and humiliated yearning, abajo, where they want you down there where you can lick the sky a man can choke on memories of his life even if they aren’t his who knows where a memory comes from that’s the biggest mystery of all in the projection booth where did the images come from that break your breath? do you imagine Godard knows, is that why he’s been in hiding with his money and his Midi and his wives

[2 XII 03 / dream transcript] Let it be a moon lost in the ferns we think is cloud

teatime on other planets where I love you too like a small horse slow on a white road so few things so many names.

Where dreams are made, where do they get their wings?

Images are what move.

An image goes.

This question is itself made in dream, a dream, and we try to answer waking, by waking.

Freud’s 1900 explanation, Tagesreste, scraps of the day, gave more hope than light.

But hope is what we needed then hope and a hammer to nail something together out there, ricket shack open to all the weather, white wood lath and grey shingle, some structure that would stand for the mind.

Put the candle in the bottle put the bottle on a rock kneel down to it saying whatever comes to mind

this is all it takes Chartres
was made from this it has to be different it has to give a little light

later the bottle has to break a thousand years to say one prayer.

THE ROOF

Was it Abbot Surlo, or Sturlo? Starling or sturgeon? Who built the great roof over Gloucester Cathedral, snow on it, early March, the old saints of England who were the old gods of Britain. They helped build it, they sat and watched and made fun of priests, they prayed along with them, they sang psalms to that strange pale god from the east, why not, it all is praying, all words are prayers, it all is stone. Or they say and watched meek as me in the hotel window, fight with my girl friend, make love on the floor, snow thin over the west of England, two cars on the M5 scrape fenders ay 80 mph and sparks fly, smoke, flame, nobody stops, nobody has to die.

Among so much saying so much left unsaid

it is not the saying that’s at fault

the much is so much the more is more

it will never run out of itself

yet when the saying stops the much will too.

Morning at last.

Not sure where any of this is going a rose unfurling from the snow undiscouraged by local politics like the idea of a city pure in the wreckage of your street, there is too much air in what is said let the idea out and see who’s left the comfortable debris in which we live moo cows and their heavy tonking bels they endure the world for us unglum in desperate meadows alp by alp I have seen them climb past all kinds of weather I have learned to turn the page right now I am living in your skin.

3 December 2003
How they all try to silence me,
father, lover.
death finally el-fina, as if the whole world existed for no reason but silencing this girl.

The lessons are arbitrary or the glasses of sweet tea stammer with implosion there is no pressure in the world Silence was right when he what did he do, something in Denmark, something to you that made you excited to feel the weight of argument rise inside you whoever such a you could be I have it in my notes or someone does, lost information flies up to the moon, makes it dark there so once a month it flushes all its stuff back down to earth moonflakes full moon ideas in heads or as the Tuscan said unformed desires quote by unacknowledged quote confusion grows until we’re binary by supper time and think I’m me and we wants you saltimbanque means acrobat literally counterjumper but that means something else in a tongue we don’t speak either and who let we in anyhow wasn’t me almost fatal enough?

Silence was a funny looking man too many arguments for just one wife the waitress couldn’t tell what the lake is called didn’t even know that I was asking for China is a different color all the time at least I think it was, those cherry blossoms those pale pavilions and the staggered trees left me alone a long time with my tea studying not for the first time on this green planet itself the intricate grammar of silence.

TEACHERS

where the ink flows into the sea the donkeys drink, they like the salt the black combination, quick dilution of government meanings in slim amazements of a tropic mind words dissolve in wet sensation their noses tickle from their aspirations as we should stand up to our bellies in philosophy reading the seafoam with careful eyes.

STAINLESSNESS

A being being stainless by nature cannot be polluted

what seems pollution are things coming and going but the being is not touched by all the departures the being asks itself always Is it permitted?

and the being knows the true answer:
It is permitted to me by way of my being

Nothing can happen to it because it is itself

What it says is spoken into the actual place a being is always and it actually is someone who is being a being has a sense of being but the sense of being flickers in and out while the being is even when the sense of being is silent the being speaks.

Awkward as it is the sun slides the forest wakes the machinery forgives me again. Apples rotting under trees — we see a lot of that where I came from, control the price of things, control the weather.

FEELINGS

You love me you hate me it doesn’t matter which end of the verb you choose it means either way I matter in your mind

I am the cobbles underneath your feet and if you asphalt me over with some other or some others I still am there beneath you always, shaping the way the softer meaningless black goo shapes your feet

I still make you go.
