Wake as wood crows rooster one bird doing the work word of another.

Scope of escape the sky footsteps of a brooding crowd how slow they move past the vitrines of noon East Village down town lean against clean trees

learn to tell the truth it’s as simple as reading menu in a Chinese restaurant white rice or fried uptown or Rinchen Jungnay’s golden face filling the sky with that prosperity called heat money me cherry blossoms south each thing chanting as we look if you can see me you are still alive image Sixth Avenue painted red any avenue subdued by liquid seeming shut up you mean paint paint imagine paint it all the way back to Amsterdam Rubens Vermeer Saenredam from Spui ten Duyvil to Castle Gardens up Damrak to Centraal Station no city is worth such love you gave me yet I love you belatedly years too late too busy toe distracted for me from me too green too grey too beastly too distingue my own. Who are all these people?

if you walk too fast you escape the loop of circulation

   you engage the act before or just after it is ready what you taste today will last forever the special taste of this day in your mouth no never what you have tasted today makes you a dancer people can’t see you or see you only as a quick mistake shoving through their quadrilles you hold the taste of it in your mouth all day a city you are learning to speak.

a woman one already knows no name for her swinging ponytail the smile she sprays on her child her man set this image before me the intense dark woman talking you know her you will never speak everything already spoken rainsoaked midtown parking lot scintillant in sudden sun.

Why does Albinoni on the radio sound like New York? Or is it Vivaldi?

Fifty years ago in love with Diane Youngswick before she went to Nepal and came back with a diamond in her nose and didn’t love Ernst Toch’s Chinese music any more

I sat in the Peacock Café reading Steppenwolf while she didn’t come and didn’t come and ferns are still cool and leafy and windows have seen it all before.

We did not fight on the day of knives It does not rain on the day of rain

It is midnight in a quiet district Shushed by cars’ soft passage west to east

Red slippers on a pale oak floor not mine Yellow light from ceiling fixture

Where would we be without colors
The long careful fingers of the blind.

Finding new things a pilot through reefs where the QEII ran on rocks finds a sparsely peopled island a savage Voice lifted between a rock and a rock this is me. I am a page from a lost gospel itemizing unexciting miracles, a few unmemorable similitudes all things are like all other things or the man with a stone on his back by magic persuaded to let it fall.

This is the island of it such things as fly across the mind pretending to be day or night but always just this one thing watching the sea break on the rocks.

If my hands were clean I would touch the floor the floor’s the most important wall of all so it’s the holiest old monk who, bent low, with a palm frond broom, sweeps the temple floor clear of dust and food and offerings and filth he knows what supports us quiet root of the world, end of all our falling, the last song of all.

UNUM

Younger woman older man She smiling shows
Her first white hairs

A mingling of evidences An approximation
A coming close

Tenderness of the fate Of all becoming
To be so differently the same.

BIRD STUFF

Two rock doves melodiously squabble over the wild birds’ seed each puffs up big blue breasted plump against the other

we never know really if we’re battling or making love.

Eventually anyhow everybody flies away.

3 April 2001
Boston
Last night three sea gulls flying east All night the planes Spoke east on their way by Logan Hills over small city we Gesture at things, we go there We come back safe in multitudes Far afield from the dangerous unity But that’s what’s true.
   Only me only you.

O winter how I love thee the clarity the sweet achiote godrealm of the broken ice god-flowered crystals the shadow of ice is the deepest of all shadows holds us hides us in the clean.

Because there must be a moment when momentum stops urgent system of clarity iceberg a hundred meters high.

(at Omni, Shackleton film) To play with life the way children play with firelight throwing shadows on the innocent wall a wolf a crocodile an awkward bird that never flies away from the wrist

BOSTON BLUES

Be particular with me
I am sodden with absolutes seething with desires come and see sun sparkle on the Charles first day of actual spring snow yesterday on the trees a bask of vecchia

come and see
on your Grand Canal shiver me a steeple up Beacon Hill

I want to sail right through the eternal Gate.

3 April 2001

THE REMINDER

I will meet you
At that moment in the night When the clock
Only has one hand.

What we choose on the table to set shulkhan arukh set what is ready the ethics of a spoon

how much to raise grease-glimmering to the moon a shimmer in the gape of the tent.
Everything on the earth Waits for Rachel to come to her husband’s couch.

The old orange crate I hauled upstairs when I was five to make my bookcase with now of what was that some evidence

A struggle and a boast and something needed my mother was appalled but somehow proud the books stood up green and blue on the two shelves of the crate as I knew they would and I saw that it was good

4 April 2001
we can exaggerate it anything can be everything and then what will the cobra do climbing up the bamboo pipe knowing only one direction one escape escape not from but into light at the end of the other I am.

VESICA

As if inside the belly a pair of hands held cupped to hold some water someone in you lifted from the stream and drank santana mindstream current this.

Something in you drinks

When two circles of the same size care one another such that the circumference of each touches the center of the other the territory overlapped is called the vesica, bladder, vesica piscis, fishbladder, a godly shape, a Christ or hands of his Miriam held loose in prayer, scooping moments of glinting water reflection from the stream of mind a shape they called the shape of women.

In the warm dark she stood in front of him not quite in arms reach but her shadow in moonlight came towards him she wanted to do something for the first time so he could see though it was hard to see the dark the little moon she let him see the stream of her water flow restoring this special water to what always seems at first just ordinary ground so he could see her. She gave him the sight of this, the vision of water. Where it like everything else comes from and how it goes.

Awkward, a dangerous and downward assent between them, worth it, to have been found worthy of that spectacle, something simple given quick through all the complex absences of midnight this one actual warm fact.

As if the shape of what holds renews endlessly the shape of what flows.

Spring here. Outside with me On the little hill in sun.
Flies pass by. Green words Speak from the sodden earth Little tongues. No clouds.
Everything inexperienced Finding the way. The same one We have to forget every year.
