sepB2001

Robert Kelly
Bard College
SEATING ARRANGEMENTS

Dew on grass = something remembers

Stand still in the street = buying cheese in France

France = Italy

Italy = the part of Austria below the Alps

Holy Roman Empire = river that is always cold

(the old map marks the city of Trent by a circle of chairs talking to each other) ex cathedra = talking from the chair

Let your furniture do the talking.

Freud’s chaise-longue the style called Empire the version called Biedermeier his chair was a long sentence

Slept into speech

Sentence = song

Carnival = farewell to the flesh

Flesh = chair

Song = blind man in an empty sunfilled street

Fallen branch = reminder

Mind = wind (chairs have legs and arms and feet but no bellies and no brains, no sex) sex = conversation

(without body the syntax goes wrong, awry, the words slip this way and that nothing to settle on or be at peace) or a chair is nothing but sex the body becomes the couch the upright chair listens to the patient recliner lounge = silence after period after exclamation point a well-furnished sentence in which the doctor is safe from the patient (shocked silence when the TV goes off ever-receding point of light you used to see old black and white) every machine draws its power from me

I run this river

I = you

(you control everything. This is just a quiet hour while you’re asleep and I’m left to be just me) so many words to say repotted plant = child’s fountain pen everything has a Latin name too e-mail = letters we can’t wet with our tears the smear of light across your lips who have you been naming?

(American beer is about drinking a lot for a long time and making noise. English beer is about getting drunk fast and cheap) we have less time than anybody we have to use it more formal poetics = rubber tires on a Gypsy wagon

(Atesia = Adige = Etsch)

three rivers of a single name

Bravura checkpoint = six lane midnight

(what you did with the cheese was eat it in the park = what you did with the cheese was carry it up three flights of stairs and eat it in Christine’s dining room watching a crow —they said there are no crows in this town — walk on the iron railing of the balcony across the narrow street above which and a little to the left you could tell the time by the clock tower with the gilded monogram very close but far to walk to because the way the streets run it seemed the other end of town by the time you got to the door of the church but there it was right outside your window, her window, and a dome over there and so on, up to the nearby mountains capped with cloud and sparkling with sunlight turning red soon while down below the market closed and you’d have no bread till morning)

All night listening to the furniture

All night listening to the furniture making love

All night listening to the furniture making love to the room
The room makes love to the house

For no conceivable reason x loves y

Love each other

Doors are there mostly to make it hard for furniture to leave the room

Sorrow of a room abandoned by its chairs

The child’s pen runs out of ink

He doesn’t know where to turn

Turn = drink from a fountain fountain = girls bend down to drink and splash around and laugh see them seeing = exile to see the world is to be far from it far from them love = lose lose = forget the otherness of the other priests bake bread around the corner streets multiply lose = to forget the address love = to remember the address love = to climb the stairs hive = listen to them making honey honey = bread bread = priests street = series of integers tree full of heart shaped leaves sunshine = in the garden of the stone elephant a man’s arm around a woman’s waist integer = a number as far as her house was above the ground outside the windows were the leaves of the prolific ailanthus a Chinese tree it was raining outside her house she said = I’ve got your number (a relationship betrays the pure moments of time) isolated integers betrayed (betrays moments into a pattern) pattern = commodity who brought this tree here who remembered the furniture phone number street = outside our love there is hardly any town streets are multiples of going straight

Damascus

Dirt road by the river

(we knew no common language but we had both watched a lot of Bergmann movies so we tried to communicate in Swedish)

(I said your skin is blue she said you are playing with my death) honey by the river the priests have gone to sleep the bread is all sold the numbers are all taken young men with nothing else to do can always carry guitars we learn how to dance by standing still there is only one dancer ever bread = something to do with your mouth while the word is waiting

(so much time and philosophy and poetry and love are about putting things into other things) so furniture is made mortise and tenon tongue and groove tongue and lap

Roman de la Rose mulch all over your shoes is the ink finished with the words yet (is language still here even after we speak) no matter how many languages you learn you can’t forget this one this is the one you are the one

(how can a man still alive have so much to say) rose = import when a mediaeval poet talks about a rose, she means something that comes from Palestine or even truer countries further east rose = fire

rose = rumor

all mediaeval poets were women — their male amanuenses signed the work

Virgil and Homer were women too

Only Sappho was a man a glass door, I mean a lawnmower a telephone, an island in the sea, Serendip, a man no voice is who I pretend to be (our relationship will never go far = we are too near) there is always a machine doing something outside outside is where things are done inside is all knowing

(even if you can’t play the piano you can always learn to sit beautifully still upon a chair) chair = instructor

chair = choir chair = sluggish bee in autumn sunlight waiting to sting a soft place chair = a branch fallen from the linden tree chair = a book about the architect chair = a neutral value in a crowded palette chair = a deft movement in a crowded room chair = they all touch you at once chair = cloud

(how many people can sit on it = at the same time I love you, I am still me. Or conversely) chair = conversation conversation = love affair love affair = supposed to be in heaven

(she came through the door at first light to wake me her filmy white peignoir flowing around her the water I swam through to wake) was I awake yet = was it Italy or here she came to wake me heaven = the habit of being happy no matter what (being accurate without rhyme) loveseat = approximation hill in Germany = lyre remembering = telling lies (don’t hurry the overture, the world isn’t ready yet behind your curtains) after all these continuities ready to begin chair = the sum of we keep trying to say to one another this and that = who chair = tile in a mosaic wall (will never stop talking) rose = thing that catches dew chair = quiet howitzer chair = three brunettes climbing up to the castle in Prague, a trolley car crosses the river on its way there, brushes against a leafy tree branch every time chair = chemistry

(how many space in an open field) plein air = your feathered hat (to be with the one who moves you most) piano = furniture flower garden = unseen telephone

(a smell I sent you by voodoo or other magic means)

(you woke up and your house was full of it)

(but was it your house) your house = someone’s chair your chair = you belong to me me = everything you confess is yours magic = sodium chloride common salt verge = edge or wedge verge = tend or penetrate or bend dew = be there before the end end = the light comes over the hill and it’s anyday today dew = the love-spewed smear from some high lover’s business (as if the swollen earth were pregnant with one more dawn than can fit into the ordinary day) give me that dawn give me that light you only are dew = an arrow arrow = name

name = animal animal = wolf

wolf = tidings

(what news from the sea?)

what if my name were really all you say to me you call me and I come truth serum = tree sap, sticky fingers, mistletoe on a hill in France garance = a kind of scarlet the water is inside the fruit it breaks and lets the ocean out surf = ash of the burnt sea

(there is a little-known valley in the high Tamirs where a battle has been going on continuously for eight hundred years, I don’t mean a war with its own exhaustions and intermittencies, I mean an actual non-stop battle, all day long, all night long as far as they can see, eight hundred years. It is said that the reason why all the lands nearby are desert or nearly so is that generation after generation of farmers and tribesmen and artisans have hurried by themselves or been dragged by others to the battle, eight hundred years, and the women all went away. No one to cultivate the land. If no one does it, the wind does it, and sun. And night. Now the warriors must come always from further and further away to reach the place of battle among the weary mountains. The battle goes on, the men flood in from far away, the desert grows and grows, both sides (if there are sides, I am not sure, it is not told) pray to the Lord, the God of Hosts, and pray for more weapons and more men, and pray for peace)
They come from the horizon

Each one

Carrying a chair

Chair = tell the truth if you have to Chair = anger is always against oneself (name the valley, help her brush her hair) chair = self-portrait carved in wax chair = even a living person will last longer than Egypt chair = Fayum

chair = the mystics of upstate New York, Elmira, Moroni’s hill chair = on the bottom of the lake a woman sits well able to speak without breathing to breathe without meaning chair = until everyone is seated and most have fallen asleep a chair is about conversation conversation = learning what you really mean by means of telling mistakes and approximations to other people and listening to theirs conversation = always is about desire conversation = is desire

(double-stopped fiddles circular-breathing clarinetist) pieces of sound chair = music

a chair is music that listens to you to you for a change like a lawn with a fox on it after midnight

“the Sessile Quotient is a figure that expresses the number of persons seated as a percentage of the total number of persons assembled. Thus a formal state dinner would have SQ = 100, since every single guest [servants and attendants are not considered persons for the purposes of determining the SQ] is expected to be seated at all times, and duly provided accordingly with an inalienable chair, while an informal, impromptu party in someone’s apartment might have only a few seats for a large but ever fluctuating number of guests. Quite exciting parties in the judgment of participants might have Sessile Quotients as low as 9 — fewer than one person in ten will have a seat of his or her own for the duration of the party. Remember that the Sessile Quotient must always be coordinated with the Cathedratic Duration, the percentage of time that a guest at an assembly is actually seated or reclining. Usually, the SQ varies directly with the CD, but not always [examples given]. . .”

chair = an animal wind = mind temperature = number leaf = mouth

(when the bough breaks = you find it on the lawn) most chairs are made of wood ta jupe = your rayon skirt flared for flouncing the telephone knows but never tells (a woman who could tell a real rainpuddle from just some water lying on the ground) smoke plume from signal fire the sky flies away chair = leaving me here I am one who comes behind you I am not worth the regulation of your shoes to loosen recusant = one who says no, refuser, foreigner to the bliss of yes I am mouth not mouth chair = a word slipping out of your lips chair = a bloodied word slipping out of your teeth (freedom and blue passage) a circumcised word = freedom chair chair table floorlamp mantle clock chair = a paragraph chair = assertions and negations chair = do not forget me in your body chair = triumphal arch chair = each one is one each

7 September 2001