

7-1994

julB1994

Robert Kelly
Bard College

Follow this and additional works at: http://digitalcommons.bard.edu/rk_manuscripts

Recommended Citation

Kelly, Robert, "julB1994" (1994). Robert Kelly Manuscripts. Paper 1227. http://digitalcommons.bard.edu/rk_manuscripts/1227

This Manuscript is brought to you for free and open access by the Robert Kelly Archive at Bard Digital Commons. It has been accepted for inclusion in Robert Kelly Manuscripts by an authorized administrator of Bard Digital Commons. For more information, please contact digitalcommons@bard.edu.

Giving where there's wish— a needy carriage of the mind (beak open, dark wings fluffed a little back) brings one through the endless museum.

Theory: when I have seen every single thing and all the possible array of things then seeing will have no object but itself and I will see the seer plain.

This takes a long time. (Three measureless kalpas just to get started.) An alternative is to exhaust the faculty before its objects by ceaseless stimulation (television, hockey, art).

Whatever's quick. The blinded mind heals in its own wounded dark.

A danger: the flowers of midnight are poisonous to most. Unseen they yield a philosophic aroma of articulate apathy. Not good.

Maybe outside the museum of the seeable there is a city sprawled in Ordinary Light, fresh and accidental, free of the stale freshnesses of art, free of propaganda. Suppose cars, cats, pagodas, diners, people always have to eat (Greek philosophy).

Then see what happens. Only what happens.
Even if it's just some ink drying slow in rainlight, you get to go with it as it goes, go with the gleam where the gleam goes.

8 July 1994

THE TOUCH OF US

The woods are wet from hammer rain old men think of boys again

it is a classical permission to confuse the edge of this with that that soft skin on these ripe intuitions until I am the sense of touch never grows old we are classmates still of rain and wind.

9 July 1994

THE GEOLOGIST

There is always an again in these things the somber coruscations of some mineral you dragged up —felt like sucked—from a subterranean gallery only you and the Nagas know —something with the chunk and sheen and crack of obsidian but red in it and some translucent thing like the skin of a dead child — it doesn't matter about the flesh but I need the name, my machine depends on merchandise, blessed inventory! things having names for themselves—where else would evening be, and that star you posited over the Malibu horizon where svelte intelligences laid down their lives in surf — dreaming the long dull satisfying dreams that pills give you, like double features with cartoons and endless coming attractions for what came and went and here you are, sprawled in water rush and trembling with ideas.
You told me about it. You dug up the stone if stone it was. You talked in Mexican to the backhoe operator, you promised all the things people promise on their way to a new thing.
There is nothing for me but to go on believing you. Let's just agree it wasn't a stone.
How could she have been. Just tell me what it was.
It would give me a curious satisfaction.

9 July 1994

EXCLAMATIONS

The things we ask for! Geology!
Named places! Serenades!

Sometimes I think Brahms had the right idea: put all the notes down, leave them humming and walk away. The impenetrable shadows of Brahms!

10 July 1994

A butterfly trying to get into the air conditioner over and over, for an hour or more, who's counting, a butterfly somber gold and autumn trying to dance into the hot air outlet, dance around the mouth of mother, Fire.

Not fire. Heat and cold, wet and dry, it dances round the hot and wet.
A word trying to get back into the mouth.
I also have been spoken. The breath of us goes the same way to sea. A butterfly trying to be me.

10 July 1994

YOUR DEAR CHILD

for Barbara, for Dashiell.

I have been thinking of him, about this blithe impostor who comes into the room pretending to be a stranger.

But you have always known him.
He was there in the wings whenever you talked with a friend.
He was there in the wind.

There was a night in Oakland when I heard him in the fire in your fireplace, talking calmly in the strange verb system of the other world. And now he's here the way the faucet is in the sink and the palm tree in the yard rattles in the evening breeze.

Blue. Children make me sad

I think because they are always arriving. And I'm still here, stubbornly wrong. This son of yours makes me happy though, because he has been always here but is new as the next moment is when you are quietly waiting.

I suppose he is in the business of making you pay attention—what more could anybody give?
I suppose his name is Irish and means to move the way the sun does around the earth, east to west, mysterious and natural.

I suppose he has told you all this already.

10 July 1994

that apparition feeds me . a bird's worth light slung through trees the early day unbothered by reaction that poltroon feeling finch on a north perch mulberry-gorgeted guessed out of sky by simplest need we correlate harassing seed.

11 July 1994

Rebuttal of this strange man a portager who slept in his canot until the birchbark peeled around him —white writing in the dark... hopeless currency of vanished states... the surgery is waiting for the man slipping the skin off becoming something new a memory disguised as a man man I thought when I looked in the mirror not without godliness womanly too the way the eyes meet the eyes fearlessly with an openness built out of layers of fear hurt till transparency.

11 July 1994

SCHOENBERG

Something happened to Schoenberg.
I don't know what it was, a bitterness at not being better, good as he was, or something different, a break in the heart of hope, that music'd mean the way some used to, or it did, his, before some lostness or some passage into the bleak. Or he was wise beyond anything I know how to grasp, a hope in the break itself. Music no one can hear. The emptying of love, which always tells a story, love is a story,

always hurries to her.
With something to tell, even the solemn lies of Liszt, the pale sugary truths of Saint Saens.

Something happened to this man who would not tell.

Something about telling. His last works build out from a push not to be music but be word.

Speaksong. Telltale. A Survivor from Warsaw. Napoleon Bonaparte.

And at the end: "word, word, word I lack!"

11 JULY 1994

AT THE TEMPLE OF VESTA

Sequins on Grecians. A slur of breath in ear says love you.
Abandoned on the porches of queen night — a foreign farmer, nauta, 'a sailor,' feminine in form masculine in meaning, what is meaning, macho ode, pediment of Vesta's temple.

Keep your sensations pure. In virgin sensuality endure. Shadow of water. Pass sunlight through a lucid pitcher and these simmering auroras on the table cloth refracted are water's shade detected, a plume of color lewdly hinted.

Keep pure, pure against the thick from joining, seek the seem among the frantic is'es. Porch of your temple also, the lap of exile. Art makes so much of the accidents of light, we need Vesta to teach the unchanged light inside, the inner 'hearth' or focus. Round it build your round house.

Purity of feeling, feeling living on itself without predation, without the false consolations of discourse. Then feeling thinks.
Pure interchange of function in the organ. This simmering theory.

Why the sign of purity is fire. Theoria means seeing. Theory of beholding. Without holding. Goddess of letting go.
Hestia. Maiden meditation means to let thinking flow and not go with what it shows. In the temple of the fire light without residue. Or water is the ash of air, shadow's shadow. How dare be dream that be not me, or I not present to my mind's debauches? Live in joy to touch beneath the touch. Behold, we will take under the whole world! Till be is no more than to be seen, and color is a habit of inside.

Be simple in not following. No virgin goes with anyone one. A virgin is not led.

12 July 1994

the girl from Ipanema the confusions

the sundering sunlight pours down the coast one hides from what one knows the occasion is rancid in the heat touch me I claimed

but it was midnight the thieves moved like oil through the hotel and I was naked steak-frites in the Place République the damages my dear were splendidly Brazilian you didn't believe me though I was in your lap telling you the only story I ever knew.

12 July 1994

H E A T

Metal hot by nature like a hen's egg like the oil inside the rock a dormancy

then on its paws a woodchuck sleeping by the house wall we are tenants of it likewise mortgaged to the sun the dependencies the truancies

in all our rent only willing on certain hot night hot afternoons to discharge while in the lap of the book a word lies sleeping.

12 July 1994

MIDNIGHT CONFESSION

for E.R.

Shrive me. Sensibility, asking for Givenness like a kid in a dime store with nine cents.

We are born strokeless in need.
Warren Street in Hudson flooded with sensual surmise—though it kills them these people welcome experience.

Or was it me?
Elizabeth, is there a grace left inside the Creed?
A way of holding the mind free into things?
A bright remorse that takes on my pain?

I think a Christian is a redeemer, incarnate for no other reason.
Not to discuss Christ but to be him.

Do miracles me.

12 July 1994

A heron with legs let down lumbers into the sky we sign the sea with portents: every thing seen.

Do you understand that no matter how abstruse discourse becomes, how far ambitious artists insist on taking their stand from what is shared the ski is simply there?

And all we see is provident. This marches us.

We come home at last to an intimate world.
Show-off, be simple. Taste the bird-noise in the leaf.

13 July 1994

Gallivanting towards unspeakable recognitions a mountaineer busy with scree seeks the upper limit of the child's book of geography—the crinkled pillowcase beside his fevered head —since childhood is a long disease— the world is there in folds and creases of the bed sheet, the ominous thunderhead of the counterpane. My father told me and I knew it straight arrow from his honest mouth. This is the real world, the seen, the dwelled-in always, not the map of all those accidental Portugals.

14 July 1994

HAPPY BIRTHDAY PIERRE

a shout from south Annandale (under the slopes of Cedar Hill to the north of the stream Met-ambesen where it swerves joycey as applejuice to sluice the first of all the falls down to North River

whence it floweth north by westering to get to you in far Aubany surrounded by friends and for one at least moment your Son that primary clings to your forehead uræus-style and rides your shoulders and Nicole is by it is to be hoped aiming comfits at your mouth

the glad of birth daying by day and straying by night into the volupté of shadow-work

happy l'an y vers "Air!"

14 July 1994

[Two Posters by RK from the Nineteen Sixties]

NOW

an oration of the flesh un mediated COLOR in the co lor of wheat space in the broken cup the rock with NO sparrows BE ING there in the color of wheat differenced in the shield egypt in your face your breath a salt marsh with no
birds INCREDIBLE S UBSTITUTION as an object of meditation a wheel the lights of the city each light a WHEEL as imperium no more songs there is no focus to that light fire into fire no more orations SERMO the hollow grain wheat in the tide the wheel turns IS turned

2.

interminable

interruptions:

lyricism

is not a tonality

but a moral courage

I mean a color

These two texts are transcribed from flimsy posters I composed in the late 1960s. In Number 2, after a patch of beige to start at upper left, and beneath a carmine sun or moon upper right, each line was separated from the next by a tache of color: violet, lake, aqua, blue. The last nine was followed by a big checkmark in sandarac or burnt orange. (Found and copied on 14 July 1994)

