

9-1992

sepD1992

Robert Kelly
Bard College

Follow this and additional works at: http://digitalcommons.bard.edu/rk_manuscripts

Recommended Citation

Kelly, Robert, "sepD1992" (1992). Robert Kelly Manuscripts. Paper 1320. http://digitalcommons.bard.edu/rk_manuscripts/1320

This Manuscript is brought to you for free and open access by the Robert Kelly Archive at Bard Digital Commons. It has been accepted for inclusion in Robert Kelly Manuscripts by an authorized administrator of Bard Digital Commons. For more information, please contact digitalcommons@bard.edu.

Where we put the amazement writing the check for culture like a man paying his gas bill paying for the blue light heart hung on a cold morning—

For this blue light (see it under the kettle) is at the end of the old soldier's tunnel winks too in the cup of the notorious northern blue flower all your loving is towards and is what is sought forever and after

and is what is seeking there in the blue of your heart the gentian you think grows on the top of the world.

23 September 1992

COMME LA LUMIERE EST MIGNONNE AU DEHORS

O the light is so cute out there where the broken columns wait their Hoelderlin to describe o und die Apotheke um die Ecke

steht offen.
Hope
is nowhere never not.
The cashbox empties itself and the ape laughs.

Or where else will we put the sun dial?
A monkey running up the hole.
The pole.
In vain tragedy
the King's daughter (we all are) takes her life.

The new Antigone—there is no end of dying and all death is an answer to authority or every one except the last,

the nature of nature it is that takes you down into the heartland of the unsatisfying explanation below.

Being a child is a drunkenness—teenagers use alcohol to sober up into the dull world of socio-sexual responsibility.

Untrackably exhilarated by the sheer differences I grew,

 every door open on a magic cavern. Chasm.

It is still this way with me —all my writing just hasty field notes—from this great War. sKar-ma light of a star.

Homeland on a thousand islands.
Scent of butter, lots of it, melting to make oil lamp offerings, melting into the state called "clarified" —the purohit smiles at the house-hold altar.

Things.
And offerings.

Small jelly jars. Waves curling in three inches high.

In the drugstore around the corner there is a poster of a woman bathing.
She advertises something for her skin.
Her image explains as much as I can understand in 1946. How long do we have to remember?

Isn't a memory also impermanent?
Some parts of the state experienced last night their first frost.
To my cold fingertips, the back of my other hand feels like silk.

23 September 1992

THE DAY EIGHT-DEER COMING ON MY BIRTHDAY

Holy, but not very.
Hurried, but not there.

The swans of Ulverston repronounced in all the tides of Morecombe Bay.

Where we are sand someone else knows how to walk along our solitude

leaving someone else's footsteps where we thought we were alone.

No one knows the genesis of feelings but we manipulate desire.

The birds I mean mate for life and this is my time of swandom having been born at last in the fierce channel between Cuttyhunk and Nashawena where through the groaners and surf clash you can hear roaring not far the lions of property protecting the dead.

Eight of them. One for each deer to be tracked down and killed until the Departed wakes again at the bronze gates of the bank.

Morbid recalcitrance to live on the earth.

A priest of some sort moves shells around on the damp sand smooth as a table, sure as a juggler his hands.
Quick vanishings into the unknown world.
A bird eats its shadow and flies away.

Call. Three deer left. Holy, just enough. Power, from the sea.
Salt tricks, alien chemistries suddenly assimilated. Wake.
Fueled by desire amplified by the mysterious Reverberating Furnace of the alchemists from which new annealed he lifts every day the day.

24 September 1992

Slipstream through the knot unfolding, a name for a little age & then a face that wall he hides behind the features the blue-eyed mystery saves him from the crowd but not for long but not for long with the river green as an old chianti bottle & the barges that make him keep thinking My Father My Father

& all the repetitions, starting with god the Sun itself, day after day a whole life of those subtlest & most velvety variations on a theme never yet declared by the insolent soloist I am.

24 September 1992
my 57th birthday

LUMINOUS MAGNETS

Coma lumbers meninges, detrains commonly borne meanings, deters.
Wake in another brain with still the same mind, how.

24 September 1992

THE LAW

Inalterable, like the sunrays slanting down on an autumn afternoon out of an unbroken blue. How does this color come from that. And all of these from that one light.

The breaking. That without changing it divides, and its semblance passes through the gaiety of forms. Red is a church, blue is the people pouring from the heart the colorless water of their remembering.

Until everything's invisible again and we call it by a different name but no one sleeps.

24 September 1992

THE DETAILED

arrangement come to beset

the called,
where the preceptor is natural enough for us all.

24 September 1992

A PHASE OF THE PROCESS

Because of the comfrey in the cup the goldenseal the measure careful and the bright green of the leaves dried fallow now and stuffed tight in a ball jar and over them poured a meek trickle of her father's alcohol he suddenly understood the earth.

This is the place of wonder and the house of tomorrow and the moment we live in is only a trifling fugitive mistake compared to the solid mile-wide transaction of ecstasy to fall from the nearparts of the galaxy to constitute our Lawn he argued and the clockwork of the universe argued with him in that calm irritating way that chemicals have of always being so smug about their reactions — as if it was destiny, not just habit—until he was almost ready to despair. Then the camel lurched, Egypt appeared over the red hill and his mother knew one more dying.

24 September 1992

GACELA FOR AUTUMN

Friday's measure a bushel of old papers planted in wet earth and waiting, a lot of waiting. The one I want to see seldom comes from the city but when she does the admiral we've been reading about in the papers welcomes dawn graciously as a suicide can and night is always dying, even in winter we feel her heart beating alongside of our pulses if we dare to touch our own wrists on such a morning hearing the crow and the jay, seeing not much.

25 September 1992

They were sure of it because of the way it lay in the arroyo a house shaped like a river the snake shaped like a man and the man was running on all fours up the glassy sides of the arroyo o up to the bric-a-brac light toppling shadow-shattered through red rocks who can believe o who can believe

I am with you with a sexual interpretation of the language speech is an intrusion of a caress however tender or not into the unspeakable hearing of a man of a woman we are what we hear we are only a sound nonsensed up from the flat light along the stretch of the river a thigh of a river the man runs away the malevolence of the natural order never ceases to startle the earthquake kneecaps the old men it makes the old women suddenly give vent to the bitter milk of fear o who are they who hang out around the brinks of ravines the dark festering cloud scapes of no the rain never came but it leered down at you from the roof of the sky hating you the way everything hates you you belong to the language and everyone speaks you out loud.

25 September 1992

Remembering the dead deer hung by the dozens from Downsville porches
the ceremonies of self-love hunting by blue-chinned patriots at war with things that are alive.

25 September 1992 [from a week or so back]

Something the matter with my mind with the moon grinding down to its cellar time there is no moon she says tonight there is a wall I will not climb door I won't open flower won't smell

It is a bishop in crimson on his throne gaudy pretender of a lost planet this all of this is Atlantis

vanished nowhere but where we are the crumbling towers of it clear sometimes beneath the usually turbid waters the everyday mind.

Drafty ravages — I see grey, smell wet.
Those ruined cameras, those stone webs.

25 September 1992

